Women's Point of View Suggested at Final Meeting of Candidates.

SOME ABSENTEES.

Last Shots in Municipal Campaign—Peterboro's Problems Discussed.

Contestants in the municipal arena closed their campaign last night at the meeting under the auspices of the Local Council of Women in the City Council Chamber, which some of the candidates hope to grace after New Year's polling.

Mrs. A. Stevenson, president of the Local Council, acted in the capacity of chairman, and called upon the candidates in turn. W. T. Holloway, Nagle Phelan, Robert Hicks, Gordon Matthews, C. H. Ackerman, John Marshall, G. A. MacDonald, F. R. J. MacPherson, Mrs. Kate Morris, and Dr. J. J. Craig, were present and gave an account of the attitude they were prepared to take regarding civic matters.

Those invited and not present at the meeting were: W. [illegible], Robert Cotton, R[illegible], Mel. Turner, W. [illegible], Tuggey, F. Bruce [illegible], McNabb, H. M. Yelland and [illegible] Roland Wilson.

Mrs. Stevenson [illegible] that she would apologize for Mr. Tuggey as she believed [illegible] receive his invitation in [illegible]. She also mentioned [illegible] Mr. McNabb was out of [illegible]. It was regretable, Mrs. [illegible] declared, that more were not present. In her opinion a meeting of tenants and owners was essential before a municipal election and she thought that the men should maintain the association. Considering the nature of the meeting, Mrs. Stevenson thought it advisable to impose time restrictions and ten minute periods, with a possible extension of five minutes, were decided upon.

W. T. Holloway.

The [illegible] speaker called was Mr. Holl[illegible] paid a tribute to the abilities of [illegible] by politics, saying that they were cleaner morally and less [illegible] to grafting impulses. The [illegible] he declared was of major importance. It made no difference who was in the mayoral chair; the by-laws would still of necessity be submitted to the will of the people. The public was not yet fully prepared to vote on the matter, and it would not carry if it were submitted, he said, as the majority was not yet ready. The city had managed to get along witho t it so far, and according to information he had received, the plans, if carried out, would involve an outlay which could best be described as extravagant.

There has been too great an outlay for paving last year, he asserted, claiming that $132,000 was too great an outlay to [illegible] to the already stupendous debenture debt. He was willing to be convinced that the school extension might be carried out, and said that if he were elected he would be prepared to submit the matter to a public vote within three months. Personally he was not opposed to schools, but was opposed to schools being built now.

Nagle Phelan.

Nagle Phelan denied that expenditures had been exorbitant. The sewage disposal plant construction was forced upon the city by the government. In the past year no paving had been done—not a foot of paving had been laid down. True, in 1924 there had been considerable done. Mr. Phelan said he was not advocating an extensive paving programme but he did contend that a certain amount of paving should be done each year. It would be for the council to say next year whether or not the city should continue. A by-law should be passed by the council which would permit the construction

"Chamber Of Maniacs," Says Conductor Of Parliament

PARIS, Dec. 31.—(United Press).—The Parisian declines to take his crisis too seriously, especially his political ones. So it happened that an auto bus conductor was applauded by his passengers when, stopping before the Chamber of Deputies, he blithely called out "Chambres Des Fous," meaning in polite English "Chamber of Maniacs."

LOVE WAS CAUSE OF MURDER PLOT BY AGED WOMAN

Mrs. Eliza Nusbaum, 58, Admits Plotting Husband's Murder.

LOVER HELD.

Forced Another Man to Kill Nusbaum, and Helped Move Body.

CHICAGO, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press) — In the 44 years of their married life her 65 year old paralytic husband bought her an ice cream once, while John Walton Winn, a former convict, loved her and waited 15 years for him to die.

This was the defense of Mrs. Eliza Nusbaum, a 58 year old grandmother, in a confession, which police say she made, of plotting with Winn and three others to kill her husband Albert, whose battered body was found yesterday on a south side prairie.

Winn, at a pistol's point, compelled Edward Goff to kill Nusbaum with an axe. Goff said in a confession. With two pairs of ice tongs, Winn and Goff hauled the body into the attic of the home of Mrs. Delilah Martin, held as an accessory. After supper they redressed the body, loaded it into Nusbaum's sedan and carried it to the prairie, abandoning plans to burn the house or bury the body in a back yard.

Winn, 37, was arrested in Crown Point, Ind., and brought to Chicago early today. Held also were Goff, Mrs. Martin, and Marion Stringham, whose clothes were used to garb the body.

The first accusation against the grandmother came from her eldest son, Roscoe, the father of eight children.

Roscoe told of a love affair of 15 year's duration between his mother and Winn. She gave Winn $230 a month of his father's money, Roscoe said.

All young men invited regardless of membership. Refreshments served Afternoon and Evening.

THE OLD YEAR DIES—HAIL THE NEW

THE sun flares red and dim behind leafless trees in country and town, touching with its last rays the windows of farm and city homes, making us all kin in its setting glory. The stores are closing. The chores are nearly done. The factories are silent at the close of the day. The children are ceasing their play. The day is ending, and in a few hours it will have closed a year. The last sands are reluctantly falling in the glass. To-morrow is a new day and a new year.

AS THE years pile end on end it seems Time is hastening his stride, and the future does not appear so illimitable. Yet youth and life and love go on just as they used to, with the same insouciance and the same merriment. At the end of the year—another added to those that have gone before—we wonder that youth should continue, and we would, if we could, wander back over the path we have trod to gather up the fragments we missed, or spurned; to see if it is all lost to us or whether there is something left, some strength that we have gathered.

We are loath to let this year go; we would hold it back if we might. We have difficulty in grasping the truth of change, in venturing on new and uncharted seas, in yielding to the inevitable. But we ought not to be dragged protesting from the scene of triumphs or successes or affections, catching desperately at every doorway and fence post; we should walk off smiling. It is easier said than done. It is not a pleasant moment when a man first recognizes that he is out of place in his favorite sport; that dancing is rather too heating to be decorous; that he cannot rush off after a meal without suffering indigestion; that his step is less springy and his eye not so true. These are sad moments which we all of us reach, but which were better laughed over than fretted over. And let us laugh tonight at the passing years—laugh at the mistakes of youth and smile over our young fancies that died with some other year's end.

FOR after all the advancing years bring gains that cannot be obtained except by time's passing. There were sharper ecstasies in youth; keener perceptions; more passionate thrills; but then the mind also dipped more swiftly and helplessly into discouragement, dreariness, and despair. Life is not so rapturous in middle age, but it certainly is vastly more interesting. There are still doors to open upon mysterious and wonderful places; an enchanted forest, a solemn avenue, a sleeping glade.

Other doors have already been opened in traversing the corridor of life. One showed a dusty, work-a-day place, full of busy forms bent over intolerable tasks amid the din of factory and workshop. Another opened on to a bare and melancholy place, a hillside strewn with squared stones that defy time itself with their burthens of chiselled sorrow. But these are mostly behind us when first the passing of the year rings a knell instead of a paen. The musty, the dreary, the every-day, has been encountered and holds no more power to appall or discomfort, but there still remain these other doors we have never opened.

PERHAPS the greatest gain that this passing year, added to the others that have gone before, brings to us is patience. In youth mistakes seemed irreparable, calamities intolerable, ambitions realisable, disappointments unbearable. But now we have found that mistakes can often be set right; that anxieties fade; that calamities have sometimes a compensating joy; that an ambition realized is not always pleasurable; that a disappointment is often of itself a rich incentive to try again.

And so we will sit tonight, while the clock ticks out the closing minutes of 1925 and he fire winks and crumbles into ashes and the bells chime out greetings to the new year. We have happy memories and rich gifts from the past. For the future we have unlimited promises, though we see but a step ahead. And overhead, above all the stir and murmur of life and untouched by the speeding years, hang in the dark sky the unchanging stars.

Alma Gluck Makes Money To Blast Old Theories

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—(United Press). — Mrs. Efrem Zimbalist, better known to opera patrons as Alma Gluck, has blasted the old theory that artistic genuis has no place in business. With the royalties from her song "Carry Me Back To Old Virginny" Mrs. Zimbalist paid $127,000 for a house at seventy-second street and Park Avenue here. Articles have been signed for its sale at a price of $300,000, she announced.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

DURING THE YEAR that closes at midnight tonight The Examiner has endeavored to fulfil its mission in the highest ideals of journalism. In news dissimulation, instruction, and entertainment, it has broadened its field and enlarged its services to its readers. A renewed effort has been made to meet the varying needs of community life. New emphasis has been laid on local news and features; intimate stories of the city and the rich country of which it is the centre.

Many have helped us discharge our duty to our readers; helpful criticism has been made, and many heartening words of commendation passed.

News has been presented impartially and completely, without color, rancour, or comment. The Editorial policy has followed sane, unselfish lines, looking to the good of the people and the building of a greater city. Entertaining features have been added. And all has been done in the one clear, uncertain aim—to make The Examiner a newspaper that would be welcomed in every home, without a printed word that would outlaw it from the most select and most guarded family circle.

And now, on the Eve of a New Year, with its renewed opportunities and hopes and aspirations, we wish our readers and their families the greatest happiness, felicity, and prosperity.

ROMANTIC FIGURE OF DRUSE RAID IN OLD DAMASCUS KILLED OUTSIDE CITY

Hassan El Kharrat, Former Night Watchman, Incarnation of a Henty Hero of Historic Novels—Knew Obscure Alleys.

DAMASCUS, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—Hassan El Kharrat, a former night watchman in Damascus, who was considered the leader of the Druse incursion which led to the French bombardment of Damascus of October 18 to 20, has been killed in fighting outside the city.

Kharrat has played a romantic and sometimes a comic role in the Syrian revolt. He styled himself "Pasha," and with his intimate knowledge of streets and alleys of the city was a useful leader of the revolutionary raids. He never interfered with the Christian population of Damascus, and once he sent a sarcastic note to General Sarrail, the former French high commissioner, twitting him with responsibility for the suffering of the Christians of the city.

Kharrat usually led attacks against posts of the Syrian gendarmerie, where he disarmed the defenders and stripped them of their uniforms. His most recent exploit was his announcement that he had detailed 40 ment to cut off the head of Henry de Jouvenel, the present high commissioner.

FLOODS, LIGHTNING AND FIRE SPREAD TERROR IN BRITAIN; FACTORIES AND HOUSES BURN

Chimney of Poor House Falls, Burying Forty Aged Inmates.

LIGHTS OUT.

Dislocation and Havoc Wrought By Terrible Storms To-day.

LONDON, Dec. 31 (United Press) — Floods, lightning and fire wrought serious damage and dislocation throughout the British Isles today. Many factories and dwellings were burned when struck by lightning and some towns were dark through the crippling of their lighting plants by the storms.

In the slums of London's east end, a huge chimney of a poor house fell, burying forty aged men inmates who were still abed. One was killed and eight injured.

Today's high water and lightning were the aftermath of heavy rain storms yesterday when in greater London alone 11,000,000 tons of water fell within an hour.

DAM BURST.

VIENNA, Austria, Dec. 31. — (Canadian Press.) — A despatch from Oedenburg, in Burgenland, Westren Hungary, says a dam at Kleinraab, on the Raab river, burst last night, menacing thirty villages.

An unconfirmed report states that thirty-six miners were drowned when the salt mines at Maros-Ujvary, were flooded.

RUHR VALLEY FLOODED.

ESSEN, Ruhr Valley, Germany, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press.)—The Ruhr river, swollen by rains, is rising alarmingly. Rural sections around Essen are flooded.

LONDON, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—Great Britain was struck by another westerly gale last night, bringing heavy rainstorms, which further raised the waters of already swollen rivers. During the height of the storm in London two men were killed and eight injured, when a chimney crashed into the dormitory of a Stepney workshop. More than 100 telegraph and telephone lines are down in the country. There is only one communicating with Dublin, and service to the Continent is seriously dislocated.

A mail train crashed into fallen trees at Berwyn, Wales, but escaned with damage to the locomotive. The roofs of houses in the Reading district were demolished and much material damage was done in Yorkshire villages.

SAVED THE EMPIRE.

Colonel Amery, British colonial secretary, whose courage at Geneva on the Mosul question saved the empire from becoming the mock and derision of its foes, and the despair of its friends, in the opinion of Lloyd George.

THE WEATHER.

In yesterday's papers there was an account of a large meteor that passed over New York State, and descended to earth in that state on Tuesday evening. This same meteor was seen by a number here in Peterboro, and several spoke to me yesterday of having observed a very large "falling star," in the southern sky. "Falling stars," so-called, may be seen any cloudless night. A meteor, though of the same nature, is a much larger body, and succeeds in reaching the earth without being entirely consumed in its rapid passage through our atmosphere. Astronomers say that scattered through space there are innumerable small bodies (probably the fragments of a planet that has met with disaster at some period) and that when these fragments come within the attractive power of our earth, they fall by the force of gravitation. The smaller pieces are entirely consumed by the great heat they generate when they strike our atmosphere, while the larger pieces sometimes reach the earth with their characteristic glazed appearance. Specimens may be seen in almost any museum. As to-morrow will usher in a New Year permit me to wish the reader a bright and happy one.—W.P.

OLD YEAR CLOSES WITH RUMBLE OF ENMITY AMONG THE NATIONS THAT MAY FLARE INTO OPEN WAR

42 Mexican Miners Killed Death List May Increase

EAGLE PASS, Texas, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—Forty-two bodies have been brought out of a Mexican National Railway coal mine at Palan, State of Coahuila, where an explosion occurred Saturday.

News of the disaster reached here by courier, and reports last night were that other dead probably were in the mine. A score of miners seriously injured have been accounted for.

The blast is believed to have been caused by the breaking of a miners' safety lamp which ignited gas in the mine.

PEACE A DELUSION.

Europe More Than Ever a Powder Mine—Trouble Brews in Orient.

ROME, Dec. 31—The meeting of Premier Mussolini and Sir Austen Chamberlain, the British Foreign Secretary, at Rapallo Tuesday furnished occasions for the Fascist press to renew its previous strong expressions of skepticism regarding the league's proposed disarmament meetings.

In addition to the extremist L'Impro and Il Telere, which continued to fulminate against Germany, even the Corriere D'Italia, which usually is comparatively mild, emphasizes the assumption that the Italian Premier and Sir Austen talked about the new Russo-Turkish treaty rather than the plans for giving effect to the pacific principles laid down by the treaties of Locarno.

The Corriere D'Italia says clouds of trouble appear everywhere on the horizon. "In the Orient the Chinese anarchy is overshadowed by another fire which again places the United States and Japan face to face."

Suspects Germany

L'Impero under the title of "The Utopia of Disarmament," say that Europe is more than ever a powder mine. This paper enumerates various questions which might touch the match at any time, and devotes more than a column to trying to prove that Germany, in spite of her professions of helplessness, is really the best armed nation in Europe, principally because of her united spirit of revenge.

Il Tevere declares that the "spirit of Locarno appears more and more as a colossal deception which is damaging to sincere, honest and chivalrous peoples." This journal says that Locarno is a benefit to France, but only because it represented an internal victory for the government in power, but that in reality Germany has profited most because Locarno enabled Germany "to chloroform the rest of Europe."

MR. MASON SAYS FACTS TWISTED

Answers R. R. Hall's Statement That Rates Have Increased in City.

AVERAGE DOWN.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir: Mr. R. R. Hall, in his letter to the Examiner last night continues his policy of distorting facts. He states that the water revenue is up 83 per cent., but he ignores the fact that the number of consumers has increased very considerably, and also the fact that in the period which he discusses, the filter plant was built and placed in operation and that this additional cost was added to the water rates. At the end of 1922, after a full year's operation of the filter plant, the number of consumers was 5030 ,and the revenue received was $65,984.65, or an average cost of $13.12 per consumer per year. In 1924 the number of consumerswas 5309, an increase of 279, and the revenue received was $64,479.62, a decrease of $1505.03, and the average cost to the consumer was $12.14, decrease of 98 cents. During this period two reductions in rates had been made, one of 10 per cent., and the other of an additional 5 per cent.

He states that the revenue from the household light was increased 121 per cent. Let any light user examine his bills for this period and he will find that he cannot by the wildest imagination justify R. R. Hall's statement. The number of light consumers in 1919 was 4257 with a total K.W.H. consumption of 1,378,472, or an average yearly consumption per consumer of 324 K.W.H. which cost the consumer 3.3c per K.W.H.

In 1924 the number of consumers was 5266, an increase of 1009, and

Voice Of The People

SUNDAY BATHING.

The Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir:—May I be pardoned to voice my views on the Sunday bathing question. I cannot, for the life of me, see what harm there is in bathing on Sunday. If the person or persons who have the convenience for a bath at home on Sunday wish to have a bath, they have one, whether it is Sunday or not, but there are others who have not this convenience at home, but who need a bath quite as much, and perhaps more so, than those who have their baths at home; therefore, what harm can there be in it. To my thinking, it is just a few of our citizens who are real killjoys, who really think it is a sin to even strike a match on Sundays, who oppose this thing, and yet perhaps they are the very ones who set out early in the morning on Sundays, in their cars, to spend their Holy Day, in splashing about on the beach at Cobourg, and yet we, who are less fortunate, have to be content with just a look at the water running down the river, never daring to venture further, in case we should be ordered off. Now, I hope that our voting citizens will do their best on this question, and open up for us one of the many pathways of freedom that are closed to us to-day. Yours truly,

—P. T. King.

FROM MR. HICKS.

December 31, 1925.

The Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir:—It would not be fitting at the close of my brief campaign for the Utilities Commission to let pass unnoticed my appreciation of the impartial conduct of your paper during that time.

The fact that you have given front page space to the Utilities Commission for reply, when the attack appeared on that page, is much appreciated.

The same courtesy having been extended to the writer makes me feel doubly grateful and I extend to you and all the staff of The Examiner, and to all the citizens of Peterborough, regardless of their opinions on municipal affairs, my sincere wish for a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

—Robert Hicks.

FROM MR. MERRILL.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir:—I wish to apologise to the Women's Council for showing my North of Ireland blood after the close of the meeting last night, when Dr. Holloway told me to shut my mouth—that I was not paying any taxes. Now it is up to the tenants of this city to show Dr. Holloway and others of his type that 100 per cent., and not 38 per cent., of the citizens constitute the people and so far as the mayor for next year is concerned it is up to the electors to lay aside every prejudice and weigh those two men from a stand-point of merit, efficiency and service. So long as I eat my bread and butter in Peterborough I am going to take an interest in its affairs and I hope it will be for the welfare of the city, both morally and politically. Thanking you, I remain,

Yours truly,

—W. H. Merrill.

SUNDAY BATHING.

The Editor of The Examiner.

The issue before the citizens of Peterborough now in connection with Sunday bathing, and the attitude of the Ministerial Association on the same, seems not to be very clearly understood, if one is to judge of it by The Examiner editorial and Voice of the People columns.

In this connection we are not here and now concerned with the question as to whether it is right or wrong for any individual to bathe for cleanliness or pleasure on the Lord's Day, nor do we state and define any legal objection, whether as to the responsibility of the parties using the city's beaches on Sunday, or the city in providing them facilities. The question we raise, and co mend to the attention of citizens is one of public policy on the part of the city.

Throughout Canada, so far as history declares, and practice emphasizes, and so far as evidence of any statute is concerned, it has never been the policy of anybody formally representing the people within any limits whatsoever to impose by its authority any religious ceremonial or duty on the Lord's Day. On the other hand, however, these bodies have always encouraged and fostered such religious exercises on the day thus set apart. This they have done by themselves abstaining from all public functions, even of a social character, and by suppressing all disquiet and disorder on that day, having in view the most favourable conditions for the development in moral strength of both the individual and the nation. This responsibility to foster all that is best in our national life rests upon all public bodies and public representatives in any capacity.

This ideal has been well exemplified by His Majesty the King, when, as Prince of Wales, travelling in India, he distinctly disavowed all public functions, and refrained from accepting social entertainment, or encouraging any travel on the Lord's Day.

That the city should not, by the employment of labour, provide, on the Lord's Day, amusement for the public, is our conviction. Should it do so, it at once enters upon a campaign of education in the direction of secularizing the Day in the minds of the people. It may not command the religious observance of Sunday, but it likewise ought not to commend the secular use of the Lord's Day by making provision for public amusement, especially in the light of all the prestige that the city authorities carry in any of their public acts.

The question broadens itself out in this fashion, that if the city provides, on the Lord's Day, one form of amusement in which one class particularly is interested, it ought reasonably to be expected to provide other forms of amusement that would appeal to other classes. Otherwise you would have the class legislation feared by The Examiner. A step in the direction such as that to which we now state objection means ultimately going the whole way in the direction of providing Sunday amusement.

In a word, therefore, our contention is, that the city ought not, as a matter of sound public policy, to employ labour on Sunday and thus or otherwise provide amusement for the public under city auspices on the Lord's Day.

When, several years ago, it was proposed to open the Toronto city slides for use on the Lord's Day, the viewpoint hgrein set forth was presented to the Board of Control, and the slides remain closed on Sunday. Thanking you. Faithfully yours,

—M. C. M.

To the Editor of Peterboro' Examiner.

Dear Sir:—I have been very interested in reading the discussions of the various questions which comprise the issues at the election tomorrow, and to my mind the two outstanding questions are the ones affecting the financial position of this city. I believe in education, but it is not only a question of education but the question is whether many of the ratepayers are to be allowed to live and keep their property or whether the hard-working, industrious man who has scraped enough together to buy a home is going to be beggared through the high taxes. No vote should be given tomorrow to anyone in favor of increasing the burden of taxation without first submitting the question to those who have to carry that burden. Thanking you. Yours faithfully,

—George Leader.

MR. MASON SAYS

the total K.W.H. consumption had increased to 3,119,460 K.W.H., or an average yearly consumption per consumer of 612 K.W.H., due to a greater use of electricity through ranges, water heaters, washers, irons, etc., and that the cost per K.W.H. had been reduced to 2.6c.

A typical example will illustrate this point: A consumer using current from the Commission's lines in 1922 had an installation consisting of lights, iron and toaster, and his bill for the months of January to March was $4.04 for a consumption of 132 K.W.H., or an average cost per K.W.H. of 3.2c. He installed an electric range and water heater during the following summer and for the same period in 1924 his bill was $11.36 for a consumption of 783 K.W.H., or an average cost per K.W.H. of 1.45c. This consumer paid more to the Commission in 1924 than in 1922 by $7.32, and he also used 651 K.W.H. more, but the average cost was reduced from 3.20 cents to 1.45 cents. The same facts apply to the commercial light consumers, the average cost having decreased from 2.2 cents per K.W.H. in 1919 to 1.7 cents per K.W.P. in 1924.

As with these Departments, so with the power consumers The increased revenue was due to increased business. New industries have come to the city in that time and the average horse power consumed has increased from 2317 H.P. in 1919 to 4051 H.P. in 1924.

This is an impartial statement of facts.

E. F. MASON.

LIBERAL PAPERS GIVE NO WEIGHT TO PLOT RUMOR

Attach Little Credence To Report of Move To Depose Baldwin.

STORIES REVIVED.

Tales of Split Among Conservatives First Heard Months Ago.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—It is noteworthy that the Liberal newspapers refrain from attaching too much weight to statements made in the Glasgow Herald by its London editor that there is a plot among some of the Conservative members of the House of Commons to depose Premier Baldwin from the party leadership, break up the Government and split the Conservative party. Stories to the same effect were broadcasted months ago and are now being revived. The Herald, however, says that leading Conservatives are not connected with the movement, which has originated in an entirely different quarter.

The Manchester Guardian, Liberal, while conceding that there may be fire behind the smoke, hastens to add its own doubt as to whether it is much of a fire. It expresses opinion that the contemplation of a general election would cause the vast majority of the Conservative members of Parliament to rally round Stanley Baldwin, or any other Conservative Premier.

DOURO MAN WAS NEARLY DROWNED

Was Thrown Into Icy Waters of the Saskatchewan River.

COMPANION LOST.

DOURO, Dec. 31.—The following clipping from the Calgary Herald will be read with interest by friends here and elsewhere in the county. The Martin O'Connor mentioned here is a brother of Mrs. Joseph Leahy of Douro. Mr. Stephen O'Connor of Peterboro is a brother. When Mrs. Leahy last heard from her brother great efforts were being made to ward off pneumonia and the body of Carlson had not been recovered.

MEDICINE HAT, Dec. 3.—Two employees of the Ajax Coal Company, Ivor Carlson and Martin O'Connor were attempting to reach the mine by rowing across the South Saskatchewan river at a point near Redcliff, at an early hour yesterday morning, when they encountered a large block of ice about mid-stream. Being unable to get through the ice, they were endeavoring to row around it, when their boat upset, throwing both men into the water, which at this time of the year is very cold.

Although they were able to cling to the upturned boat for some time on its way down stream, Carlson was overcome with the cold and drowned before Nick Burt, a fellow workman, who saw the men holding on to the boat, was able to reach him. Burt succeeded in getting to O'Connor just in time, and brought him to shore. Through exposure in the extremely cold water, O'Connor is suffering severe shock. City and provincial police dragged the river all day, but up to a late hour last night had not been able to recover the body of Carlson.

SURPRISE PARTY

Ladies of Grace Church Brought Gifts for Bride-To-Be.

MILLBROOK, Dec. 31.—A pleasant surprise was prepared by about fifty ladies of the congregation of Grace church in honor of Miss Irene Francey, whose marriage to Mr. J. H. Yake, of Brighton, took place on Monday of this week.

A day or two previous to her wedding the suprise party arrived at the home of the bride-to-be and presented her with a miscellaneous shower, the gifts being piled high in a large, and beautifully decorated basket, which was carried in and placed in front of her chair during a moment or two when other members of the party were directing her attention elsewhere.

Miss Francey thanked the donors for their kind thoughtfulness in a few, well-chosen words, and all enjoyed seeing the parcels opened and hearing the messages of good-will with which each was accompanied.

Silverware, china, embroidered linens, daintily trimmed towels of varying sizes, kitchen utensils, wickerware, etc., were among the many things useful and attractive which composed the "shower."

An enjoyable hour or more was spent in social converse before the pleasant gathering finally dispersed.

HINDENBURG ONE ABLE TO REALIZE HIS LIMITATIONS

War Lord Did Not Restore Hohenzolleran Dynasty as Expected.

ENDORSED TREATIES

By FREDERICK KUH.

BERLIN, Dec. 31.—(United Press).—Germany rounds the corner of 1926 after her most eventful year since the World War.

Crowded into the past twelve months were Field Marshal Paul Hindenburg's election to the presidency of the Republic, the signature of the treaties of Locarno, the first year of the Dawes plan in action, and the crumbling of Stinnes' and other towering economic empires into dust.

To those who anticipated that Hindenburg's election would mean a swift restoration of the Hohenzollern dynasty, a headlong revival of militarism and preparation for a war of revenge—the first six months of the aged soldier's presidency have brought a complete disillusionment. Hindenburg has proved himself a man who realizes his own limitations and capabilities, and is not inclined to overstep either. He has displayed the utmost tact in holding aloof from political controversies, in which his interference might have set the spark to civil strife.

The Locarno treaties confronted the venerable Hindenburg with a perplexing dilemma. On the one hand, his political friends, the German nationalists, repudiated the treaties. But his Cabinet, led by Chancellor Luther and Foreign Minister Stressemann, announced that they would stand or fall by their approval of the Locarno agreements.

Hindenburg unequivocally identified himself with the Government's endorsement of the treaties. Friends of the President know that this decision cost him a bitter personal struggle.

Even with the signature of the Locarno treaties, their fate—as far as Germany is concerned—remain an object of political conflict. The German nationalists, now stronger than any other party in the Reichstag, will have none of the treaties. Their opposition to Locarno led to the resignation of three nationalists Ministers from the Luther Cabinet.

In fighting the treaties, they declare that Locarno means Germany's voluntary assent to Versailles, that the different interpretations placed upon the agreements by Germany, France, England, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia augur ill, in case the treaties are actually enforced, and finally that Germany must not enter alliances with the Western Powers at the cost of Russia's friendship.

But the advocates of the treaties are predominant and their contention that Locarno means the end of the Entente and the dawn of Germany's revival as a world Power, is the prevailing opinion of the Germany electorate.

Improvement Expected.

These circles expect a firm economic improvement in Germany to follow the stabilization of European political relations through Locarno. They look back with mingled horror and despair at the crisis which engulfed German industry during the past year.

That crisis culminated in the collapse of the Stinnes trust. In fact, however, the years of inflation and illusory prosperity were wreaking their vengeance among all mushroom business enterprises. Giant concerns, such as Stinnes, were built upon the quicksands of inflation, and once the business ran on to the hard rocks of non-speculative trade, it foundered. With this failure, came the end of "vertical" trusts in Germany—embodying in one organization the whole gamut of industry from mine to factory. But "horizontal" trusts on the American pattern have received fresh impetus and, in the chemical and iron industries and oil trade, new mergers are being formed, by which Germany's competitive ability in the world markets will be enhanced.

Meanwhile, however, shortage of credits and lack of markets holds German economic life firmly in the grip of stagnation. Reparations payments serve as a ball-and-chain around Germany's economic ankle, and not until the vanquished nation is exempted from paying them will prosperity appear on Germany's horizon.

Meanwhile, the Dawes plan completed its first year—although the payments which it required were actually met by foreign loans to Germany, subsequently repaid to the Allies as "reparations." Now that the day is approaching when the Dawes scheme is to come into full force, many responsible quarters are discussing its possible revision. But it may be assumed that any substantial change in the reparations arrangement will not be possible until 1928.

MARRIAGE WITHOUT BANNS IS ANNULLED

Evaded Quebec Law Judge Says in Decision.

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 31. —(Canadian Press.)— The marriage contracted between Patrick Onofrio and Camilla Meunier, on December 17, 1923, was annulled in the Superior court by Mr. Justice Druneau Wednesday.

The suit to annul the marriage was taken by Dame Meunier, who stated that both she and Onofrio, though Roman Catholics, had been married before Rev. H. Joliat, of the St. Jean Presbyterian church in this city, in order to get past the United States' immigration authorities. The plaintiff stated that the marriage was null because it was performed without publication of banns, and without other formalities required by the marriage law of this province and by the canon law of the church.

In rendering the judgment dissolving the marriage, Judge Bruneau held that it was null because it had been contracted in such fashion in order to evade the law of the province.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

After serving four years on the Board of Education I am allowing my name to go before the electors for re-election.

There is an urgent need for additional accommodation for pupils passing from the public schools, which, owing to the Adolescent Act must be provided.

The plan submitted by the Board is the most economical solution of the problem having regard to Government grants and Government requirements.

But I am in favor of submitting the matter to a vote of the electors for their approval before action is taken.

His stand on the school question is, and always has been, that it should be submitted to the people.

For the Board of Education

TO THE ELECTORS:

In yielding to the persuasion of citizens who have urged me to offer my services as a member of the Board of Education, I wish to make my position in regard to the proposed new Collegiate Institute absolutely clear.

I am utterly and flatly opposed to committing Peterborough to the expenditure of the large sum involved in the proposed building programme until the people have been consulted and have been given an opportunity to express their opinion by means of the ballot.

If I am honored by your confidence, my policy on the Board of Education will be to urge that the Council be asked to submit the question to the ratepayers, rather than to endeavor to have the building proposal ratified by the Council itself, with no mandate from the people.

Under the pressure of high taxation, it becomes necessary to surround the assumption of new and heavy expenditures with every possible safeguard, and in the case of the new Collegiate Institute, these must include the submission of the issue to the ratepayers.

With Best Wishes for a Very Happy New Year.

J. A. McNABB

TO THE ELECTORS:

As I am unable to make a personal canvass for your support in the Aldermanic contest, I wish to thank you for your past support, and to solicit a continuance of the same in the coming election; and if returned I will do my best to prove worthy of your confidence.

R. N. JONES

FOR ALDERMAN

Having accepted the nomination for Alderman I will, in a few words, state my position on some of the main issues that are to be met in 1926. Twenty-five years a citizen, and a freeholder, I am naturally vitally interested in the city's welfare. I have enjoyed a certain amount of participation in public affairs through the Motor League and the work of the Health Association. I look forward to getting behind our public bodies—Police, Firemen, Board of Education, Utilities, etc.—always with the idea of protecting the finances of the public.

On the question of the new Technical School I take the stand that the whole subject be gone into by a joint committee, taken from the Council, Board of Education, and outside experts drawn from mercantile, manufacturing, labor and social associations. Let them study not one but dozens of schemes, and settle on the best, on which the public must vote before any expenditures is undertaken. While we are Peterboro citizens we are also part of the Ontario Government and are interested in whatever way the money is spent.

We have had bitter experiences in the past—leaping before we properly look. Let us not error in that way again.

I am interested in the transportation question, which I realize requires careful handling. I am in favor of Sunday supervision of bathing; and for the sake of those who have not leisure through the day, I am in favor of Daylight Saving.

I ask for the votes and confidence of the people because I believe I can be of practical use to them as one of their Aldermen for the next two years.

TOMORROW'S VOTE.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to tomorrow's election, the Examiner feels it necessary to repeat some general instructions which, while they should be known by everybody, have perhaps been forgotten by some of the electors.

In the election of Aldermen the voter must vote for at least four candidates or his ballot will be held invalid. Five may be voted for, but no ballot marked for more than five candidates or for fewer than four will be counted. There are ten aspirants in the field, five of them to be elected.

There is no such "anti-plumping" rule in regard to voting for members of the Board of Education. Six candidates are fighting for five places, and the voter may vote for one, two, three, four or five candidates as he wishes.

All electors on the list are qualified to vote in the mayoralty and Utilities Commission contests, and on the bylaws in regard to daylight saving and Sunday bathing.

No money bylaws are to be submitted, so that there is no question on which ratepayers only have a vote.

The polling booths for the first time are located only in the schools and at the City Hall, and electors are asked to note this very radical change.

START THE YEAR RIGHT.

On the eve of the municipal election, the Examiner commends to the electors of Peterboro the desirability of exercising their franchise tomorrow.

It is a holiday; the polling place is in the school in your neighborhood, or at the City Hall if you live in the centre of the city; and there is nothing really to prevent you from voting except sheer laziness or indifference to your own best interests and those of the citizens generally.

Some splendid material for public service is to be found in the list of candidates, and the coming forward of such men should be rewarded by a notable increase in the size of the vote recorded by Peterboro tomorrow.

In addition to the election of a Mayor, a member of the Utilities Commission, five Aldermen and five members of the Board of Education, you will be given an opportunity to express your opinion on two matters of considerable interest to many citizens, daylight saving and Sunday bathing.

This is an unusually meaty menu for the electors and should be sufficient to attract to the polling booths a large number of electors who do not usually consider using their franchise as a desirable method of spending New Year's Day.

Get out and vote tomorrow and prove that you are a 100 per cent. citizen.

Vote as you like, but vote.

HEALTHY SYMPTOMS.

Signs that communities are beginning to awaken to the necessity of taking more interest in civic affairs are not lacking.

The number of candidates nominated in several Ontario cities indicates a livelier interest and a healthier spirit all round.

Belleville's record showing with thirty-one aldermanic candidates facing the barrier was the best showing made anywhere, but Oshawa with ninety-six candidates named to contest for twenty-four places puts the Motor City high up on the list.

The mere fact that fourteen men were nominated for the position of chief magistrate of Oshawa for 1926 is conclusive evidence that the people have been doing a little thinking about the important problem of securing a capable Mayor.

Peterboro has not done badly either in the matter of nominations, the names proposed by the electors this year being more numerous than has usually been the case.

It is to be hoped that this outburst of fresh interest this year is not a mere flash in the pan.

The more people who become actively interested in municipal politics the more chance there will be for efficient and businesslike civic administration.

When only a fraction of the electorate concern itself in the matter, good men are very likely to hold themselves aloof from municipal service.

"CARRIERS" OF DISEASES.

Following a church dinner in Eaton Rapids, Mich., on November 18, thirty-three cases of typhoid fever have developed, and several of those stricken are still in a serious condition, says the London Advertiser. Investigation narrowed the source of the disease to one woman of eighty-four years who had taken squash from her garden, cooked it, put it through a colander with her hands and then taken it to the dinner. The same investigation showed her to be a "typhoid carrier," although herself immune to the disease.

Medical men state that the story has all the earmarks of being correct, and it is based on well-known and accepted theory. One doctor recalled that when the theory was not as well understood as it is today it brought into the light a character dubbed as "Typhoid Mary" because it was found that every place this woman worked typhoid made its appearance. When she was taken from the place, conditions became normal.

It is also a fact, according to the same doctor, that there are people who are "carriers" of various germs but who do not contract the diseases themselves because they are immune. The reason for this immunity, he admitted, was not so readily explained. As an illustration he said that a child brought up in the slums of a city is in contact nearly all the time with more germ hazards than a child of the same age living out in the country but if the child from the country were taken to the city slums, the doctor expressed the opinion that the country child would be more apt to contract disease through exposure to it than the slum child who had been brought up in an atmosphere of exposure.

Apparently the theory of "carriers" has been more fully developed and proven than the reasons so far unearthed as to why the "carriers" are themselves often immune to the disease they carry.

TAKING STOCK.

The end of the old year offers a splendid opportunity for each one of us to apply to our lives that operation commonly termed in the business world "taking stock."

True, any day in the year might serve for that purpose, but there is a singular appropriateness in using the advent of a new year to check up on ourselves as seen in a retrospective glance over the past twelve months, and to glean from what we find in that record something that may help us in the days that lie ahead.

It is a great moral exercise to go over our experiences of the past year and to examine ourselves as to our motives, our errors of omission and commission.

There is probably no one who can stand on the threshold of 1926, glance back over his recorded page for the past year, and satisfy himself that there is no blemish on his record as he know it, even though to the world it may appear untarnished and immaculate.

It is a good time to ask ourselves whether during 1925 we have been good citizens in every sense of the word, kind and affectionate to our families, considerate toward our friends, faithful to our religious duties, loyal to our city, consistent by applying the Golden Rule in our business relations, quick to speak a good word for our fellow-men, reluctant to spread rumour and gossip, honest in our dealings with those in our employ or with those who employ us.

And then when the check-up is complete and we can see wherein we have failed, there should be a firm resolution that 1926 will see an improvement recorded in the things that have been our stumbling block.

Thus we can make the expression "A Happy New Year" mean much to those with whom we come into contact and more to ourselves.

UNCLE SAM SHOCKED.

Our good American neighbors, whose altruistic tendencies are world famous, are shocked at England. Europe they always distrusted. Europeans, as President Wilson and President Harding and half a hundred other Americans explained time and again, were always a poor lot. They knew a lot, of course, about art and literature, and they built wonderful cathedrals, and such things, and wrote marvellous books, and did other inferior things, which they called their traditions, but their plumbing was deplorable, and they didn't have central heating, had comparatively few automobiles, didn't know the blessings of the American constitution, and had deplorably wicked diplomatists.

The British, though backward, were better. True, they didn't know how to run India, or Egypt, and, after the war, they were foolish enough to think they still had responsibilities in connection with it. They actually thought, indeed, that America would keep a promise to defend France, and that, after all Wilson's brave talk, Americans would look after Armenia—which was rather childish. But apart from that they were not bad—for Europeans. The British bought America's wheat, and America's cotton, at prices fixed by America; and although half of the world wouldn't pay them a cent of something like $5,000,000,000 which it owed them, they started right in to pay America the billions they owed her. Even when America made the terms pretty stiff, those Englishmen never kicked.

But something's come over the English. All of a sudden they've become materialistic, which has shocked Washington, especially as they have been avaricious enough to say to Americans that if they want rubber which Englishmen control—because some years ago they visualized the coming need for it and prepared to supply that need—they'll have to pay so much for it. The thing, of course, is absurd. It's all right, this profit business, when the profits come to America, but isn't it a shame when good one hundred per centers have to pay Englishmen more for their rubber? Rubber is so different from wheat and cotton—and shells. It will simply make good Americans pay more for tires, and hot water bottles, and a lot of other things vital to a civilization which those poor Europeans only dimly apprehend.

Cousins shouldn't do such things—not English cousins. After all they've been letting American goods into England free for half a century, their own unemployed, and Fordney tariffs, notwithstanding, and they haven't been kicking over paying through the nose for munitions, and wheat, cotton and oil and other things that America sells them, so why not let well enough (for America) alone?—Ottawa Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Vote as you like, but vote.

A lot of citizens will find themselves back at school tomorrow. And they'll see many changes since their childhood days.

The Examiner's best wishes are extended to citizens generally that 1926 may be a happy year for everybody.

Use all your ballots tomorrow. Express your opinion as to daylight saving and Sunday bathing, as well as on the choice of members for the various civic boards.

A good selection by the citizens of Peterboro from the excellent material offering itself tomorrow will be giving the city an excellent start for a prosperous 1926.

The sixth man in the aldermanic race tomorrow will have the solace of knowing that he has an excellent chance of being appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of ex-Ald. Crowe.

Everything was about weighed up during the first two hours.

Hogs are holding at $13 a cwt. f.o.b. market today, but packers are promising a lower market next week.

EGG PRICES

OTTAWA, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press).—Markets generally steady for fresh, and slightly easier for storage. The condition of the dressed poultry market is unchanged with prices on all varieties being fully maintained under a steady demand.

Manitoba—Markets unchanged.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press).—A feature of the domestic grain trade here today was the demand that developed from some exporters for Manitoba spring wheat and a sale of a round of No. 1 Northern was made at 11 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg December option, c.i.f. Bay ports, but apart from this the market was very quiet. The trade in coarse grains with local and country account was slow, but as the offerings on spot were not large, the tone of the market was firm. Car lots of Ontario and Quebec No. 2 white oats were quoted at 52c. No. 3 white at 50 1-2c and No. 4 white at 49 1-2 cents per bushel, ex-store.

Although prices for contract grades of cash wheat in the Winnipeg market scored a decline, there was practically no change in the condition of the local flour market for spring wheat grades, prices being maintained.

Fresh Eggs Down 3 Cents.

The feature of the local egg situation was the further weakness that developed in the market for strictly fresh eggs and prices scored another decline of 3c to 4c per dozen. This was attributed to the continued downward tendency of prices in the United States markets and the more liberal supplies coming forward. The receipts were 1,901 cases, as compared with 265 for the same day last week, and 695 for the corresponding day a year ago.

A weaker feeling developed in the local market for turkeys, and prices were reduced 2c to 4c per lb., which was due to the increased shipments from Ontario and Quebec shippers and the larger offerings from the Western provinces. At the lower level of the market there was a good demand for supplies and an active trade was done with sales at 36c to 40c per lb.

Butter Firmer.

The receipts of butter were 46 packages, as compared with 584 for the same day last week, and 167 for the corresponding day a year ago. The feature of the trade was the stronger feeling that developed in the market, and prices advanced 1-4c to 1-2c per lb., which was attributed principally to the steady increasing demand from outside sources.

The trade in a wholesale jobbing way was reported fair and prices were firm at 44c per lb. for finest creamery in solid packages, and at 45c per lb. in 1 lb. blocks.

The receipts of cheese were 87 boxes, as against 479 for the same day last week, and 139 for the corresponding day a year ago. There was no improvement in the condition of the market owing to the continued indifferent attitude on the part of foreign buyers and in consequence little business of importance was done. The tone of the market was about steady with early makes nominally quoted at 21 1-2c to 22c per lb., and current receipts at 18c to 18 1-2c per lb.

STERLING RATES

Sterling demand $4.85 1-4.

Sterling cables $4.85 3-4.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press).—Wheat available for delivery tomorrow on the final settlement of December contracts here jumped today to the highest point yet this season, 190 1-2 a bushel, but the price of later deliveries came tumbling down as a result of heavy selling to realize profits.

Extreme nervousness characterized the wheat market throughout the day, and the close was irregular, varying from 5 cents net decline to 1 1-2c advance, new style, December 1.88 1-2 and May 1.80 to 1.80 1-4. Corn finished 1 1-8c to 1 3-4c off; oats 3-8c down to 1-8c up, and provisions 2 cents lower to a rise of 50 cents.

Active buying on setbacks in price frequently developed and caused transient rallies that in turn occasioned enlarged selling and consequent declines especially as the day approached an end. Much notice was taken of the circumstance that to-day's upturn carried the December price here to 25 1-2 cents a bushel above the figures which at one time were current hardly a week ago.

INTERVIEW REFUSED

TORONTO, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—Hon. W. F. Nickle, Attorney-General, said that the solicitors for Aemilius Jarvis had requested an interview with him, but that he had declined to give it. Mr. Nickle contends that further discussion about the fine imposed on Jarvis and which he now wants refunded is a matter for the courts.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

I have been reading a lot about daylight saving in your paper by other people, and I think there is a lot of red tape to this daylight saving stuff. It gives the big people of the cities and towns time to run up and down the streets an hour longer and is a paying business to the gas man. It is no good to the farmers who come to town at 8 or 8.30 p.m., on Saturday night to buy their things. By the new time it is 9 and 9.30 p.m. before the farmer gets into town, and the stores close at that hour as a rule. A farmer would have to milk his cows at 4 o'clock to get to the church by 7 p.m. by the new time, and which he cannot do.

The farmer can get his cream taken from the door; the butcher and baker can call at the door, the farmers have their mail delivered at the gate, and get their cream cheques at the door, and the farmer can send for his own and his wife's house supplies to Eaton's, Toronto, or some where else, and brought to the gate. Where would Peterboro be if all the farmers would do it? The town can't live without the farmers.

God took six days to make this earth, and the seventh day He rested. We are told he made the sun, moon and stars, daylight and dark. He gives certain hours for man to work and sleep, and pay his debts. God can destroy the earth quicker than He made it. That is what I think of daylight saving time.

Thanking you for space in your paper, I remain,

A W. Reader of the Examiner.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 1.

The new year is ushered in with splendid auguries for livelihood and enterprise. There may be much stirring around, with the nature keyed up to a high spirit of initiative and agression. There may be radical changes, probably in connection with new contracts or projects, but it might be well to be on guard against trickery and fraud, which may be of a sensational nature. This treachery may be related to the doings of inferiors. It may be a day of sensational reports.

Those whose birthday it is may prepare for a year of unusual action and enterprise. There may be changes or journeys of an abrupt and sudden nature, probably being tinged with the sensational. It might be well to be on guard against treachery on the part of underlings. A child born on this day should be bold, enterprising and resourceful, with a clever and inventive mind, possibly with a strong bent toward the sciences. A female may have a sudden and sensational marriage.

TANNERY WORKERS HAD LONG HOLIDAY

Plant Was Not Opened on Saturday—Omemee News.

OMEMEE, Dec. 31.—The employees of the Edwards Tanning Company enjoyed a real holiday week-end, activities having ceased at this busy centre at 4.30 p.m. last Thursday evening. The tannery remained closed until Monday a.m. Many of the men took advantage of the holiday week-end to visit friends in Toronto and elsewhere.

There was considerable rivalry among the small girls in town previous to Christmas over the doll exhibition in Mr. H. McGinnes' store window. Everyone was excited over the big doll that was to be given free to the person who purchased a smaller doll bearing the same number. The large window was full of beautifully dressed dolls of the sleeping variety, and, needless to say, excitement was keen until the problem was solved on Christmas Eve, and it was announced that one of the little daughters of Mrs. William McQuade was the lucky lady.

Skating is again the order of the day. The rink, which is owned by the Omemee Athletic Association, is being managed by Mr. Walter Mitchell, and on Wednesday evening, Dec. 23, a good sheet of ice was ready, and many of the young people of the village and countryside were on hand to enjoy this winter sport. Since then the weather has been so extreme that it has not been as well patronized by the older folk, several frost bites having been reported on Saturday evening.

The senior hockey team has already had a few practises, and it is reported that a junior team is about to be organized.

Omemee was struck by a decidedly cold wave on Saturday and Sunday. Saturday evening the town was almost deserted and only shoppers of necessity were in evidence. On Sunday morning the mercury had taken a further drop and in some sections of the village registered 32 below. The attendance at the churches was considerably decreased at the morning service, but by evening the weather had moderated to 12 below.

C.N.E. PROFITS SMALLER

Poorer Weather Conditions Caused Small Drop Below Last Year.

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—F. F. Brentnall, treasurer of Canadian National Exhibition, handed to Mayor Foster yesterday cheques totalling $263,383, the surplus profits from the Exhibition which go to the city yearly. The earnings of the National Exhibition this year were a little below the previous year due to poorer weather conditions.

DOURO PROUD OF MISS M'MURRAY

TALENTED FAMILY

DOURO, Dec. 31.—The whole township is proud of the achievement of Miss Anna McMurray in capturing the grand prize offered by the Peterboro Chamber of Commerce to pupils of three or more adjacent counties for an essay on "Why Peterboro is Eastern Ontario's most important industrial and shopping centre." This talented girl is only twelve years old, but already has displayed wonderful gifts as a composition writer. It will be remembered that she won first in the first limerick contest held by the Examiner last year, beating men and women who contested for the prize. It is predicted that Miss McMurray will be a brilliant newspaper woman or novelist in the years to come. Besides winning twenty-five dollars for herself as grand prize and twenty-five for her teacher, Miss Frances Fitzgerald, she also won a gold watch as winner of the first prize in Douro Township. Anna is the youngest of the five daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick McMurray. The three eldest girls are all teaching at the present time, so that Miss Anna belongs to a clever family.

Miss Frances Fitzgerald, who has been a very successful teacher in S. S. No. 5 for the past three years, may well be proud of the success of her pupil.

To Miss Marguerite Weatherhead, teacher in Union S. S. No. 1, Douro, very great credit is due, two of her pupils having won prizes; Miss Marjorie Cavanagh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Cavanagh, won a gold watch, being first prize winner for Otonabee, and Miss Annie L. McIntyre won five dollars, being second in Douro. Miss Weatherhead has been a very successful teacher in S. S. No. 1 for the past couple of years.

Miss Kathleen Fitzgerald won third prize for Douro and is a pupil of Miss Mary Lynch, S. S. No. 9.

TITLED RUM RUNNER HIJACKED, HUGE LIQUOR SHIPMENT STOLEN 700 INVESTORS HEAR SAD DETAILS

CREDITORS MEET.

In Bankruptcy Court—Many Women Lured By Big Profits.

LONDON, Dec. 31—The seven hundred investors who took a flyer in rum running, many of them woman, got little comfort out of a statement which Sir Broderick, Hartwell, titled rum runner, made yesterday at a meeting of his creditors. Sir Broderick appeared in the bankruptcy court. He declared that his liabilities were £250,000 ($1,200,000), and that his only assets were amounts due from dealers who got the liquor in the United States and have not paid him, and apparently never will.

The final shipment which Sir Brodrick sent to the United States, he asserted, alone was worth £250,000, but in thise case his partner and the dealers to whom the liquor was turned over never paid him a cent.

The baronet explained that he met an American in 1923 who asked him to ship liquor to the United States. Eventually several shipments were made, and in September, 1924, the seventh and last shipment containing 56,000 cases of proprietary brands of whiskey was despatched.

Reports of Trouble

Pessimistic reports about the weather and the activities of prohibition officers reached him; then came the report from the captain that the ship's crew was in mutiny and he had put in to Halifax. Later he was advised that the liquor had been transferred to smaller ships and that 36,000 cases had been seized by prohibition officers.

The creditors gloomily passed a resolution for bankruptcy, and adjourned for the appointment of a Trustee.

Rum Runner's Lot Is Hard, Says Sir Broderick Hartwell

LONDON, Dec. 31.—(United Press).—The lot of the get-rich-quick rum runner is a difficult one between the American blockaders and the American bootleggers.

This was revealed in the course of the bankruptcy receiver hearing in the case of Sir Broderick Hartwell, who conceived a lucrative scheme for rum runnning to the States only to find that it left him financially embarrassed.

Sir Broderick's liabilities were placed at about $1,250,000 and the receiver was told that the bankruptcy was due to the fact of "seizure of liquor by the United States—and failure of the buyers (road bootleggers) to pay."

730 PRISONERS HEARD CONCERT

PERFECT ORDER.

KINGSTON, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press)—Seven hundred and thirty of the 754 inmates of Portsmouth Penitentiary yesterday afternoon attended a concert provided for them by the management. The programme was given by Kingston talent and the inmates keenly enjoyed each number, vigorously applauding the artists. Perfect order prevailed during the concert which lasted for two hours. The chair was occupied by an inmate from Toronto, who, in a neat speech, thanked all those who took part. "Red" Ryan and Gordon Simpson, the latter recently returned to the Penitentiary from New York where he was captured after an absence of two years from the penitentiary, were brought in under special guard and were warmly applauded by the other inmates. It will be recalled that Ryan and Simpson were two of the five prisoners who escaped from the penitentiary in September, 1923. Ryan being captured in December of that year in Minneapolis after a gun battle with the police.

The orchestra played several well known songs, such as "It's a Long, Long Trail," and "Roaming in the Gloaming," and the inmates joined heartily in the choruses. The concert was held in the Protestant Chapel, which was nicely decorated for the occasion.

STREET CARS IN LONDON MAY BE LEFT IN BARNS

City Council Refused To Disallow Buses To Operate.

NO ACTION TAKEN.

Street Railway May Discontinue Service on New Year's.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—After considering the transportation question for two and one-half hours yesterday afternoon the City Council, sitting as a committee of the whole, refused to take any action on the request of the London Street Railway Company that the independent buses be put off the streets. The council also refrained from considering the street railway company 's proposition with reference to placing buses on Ridout Street at a seven-cent fare; it was further agreed that the street railway company should be granted an extension of the five-cent fares for 60 days from Wednesday. A special meeting of the Council will be held this afternoon to pass this by-law. No further concessions were made to the street railway company, and there were no bus propositions to consider. This will mean that the street car service may be withdrawn at 2 o'clock Friday morning, E. G. Ivey, vice-president of the street railway stated after he had been told the result of the meeting.

Operating at Loss.

"I can't see anything else to do than to put the cars in the barns after midnight of December 31," Mr. Ivey explained. "We are operating at a loss now, and we cannot obtain any more money to meet these losses, so we have no choice in the question. The city has the power to refuse to license the buses. This could be arranged by the council in conjunction with the police commission."

The meeting yesterday was an adjourned session of the afternoon previous at which the street railway company submitted a proposition including the placing of a bus line on Ridout Street South.

There was no discussion on what action would be taken by the council if the company carried out its ultimatum and withdraws its cars from the streets. But it has been previously pointed out the council could call in the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board to operate the cars. The attitude of some of the members of the council was summed up in the expression made by one: "Let them take their cars off."

DUTCH DISLIKE MILD WEATHER

Loss of Skating, Due to Change in Climate, Causes Concern.

NATIONAL SPORT.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 31. — North European people say something has happened to the climate. The winters are not what they used to be, even within the memory of men yet living. There are various theories to account for the change—the axis of the earth has slipped, or the Gulf Stream, which makes Northern Europe habitable, has drifted from its course. At any rate, winters are not as formerly, and Holland mourns the loss of winter sport.

Everybody knows about the skating of Holland. It shares celebrity with the windmills and wooden shoes. But visitors to Holland of recent years, who hoped to see Hans and Grete and the glorious silver skates, have been disappointed. This winter, weather observers think, bids fair to be an improvement and already there have been opportunities for the national sport.

Probably nowhere else in the world is a whole nation turned out of house by a cold snap. They have a saying in Holland that, in fine, frosty weather there is not an old wife keeps at her spinning wheel. Young and old, rich and poor, take to their skates.

Skate For Pleasure.

They skate for pleasure; they skate to business; they use their far-reaching network of canals both as play places and as routes of communication. Probably even the Dutch themselves do not realize how extensive and general is their system of inland waterways, except when the ice closes the canals to boat navigation.

Hollanders say that one never knows the country truly until he has explored it by following the canals. With a set of accurate maps for guidance one may skate from one end of the country to the other.

It is a historic fact that the earliest use of skates in Holland was not for sport, but for serious purposes of transportation. There are good country roads in Holland now, but these are a modern innovation. In ancient times the inland highways were impassable in winter and naturally those who must stir abroad took to the canals.

But walking on slippery ice is not easy. It is much simpler to slip and slide on ice, and slipping and sliding suggest skates. So very early the Dutch people made skates. There are some of those primitive skates still to be seen in the museums of Holland. They are not much like modern skates. They are made of bone, the shin bones of oxen, and tied to the feet with strings or leathern thongs.

Evolution of Skate.

The whole evolution of the skate may be studied in these Dutch museums. There are curious wooden skates, much like old-fashioned chair rockers. Later these were improved by facing the wood with iron. Later a fine invention inserted a steel blade into the sole of a wooden shoe. And so the skates were made better and better until the Dutch skates are among the best in the world.

There are scores of factories turning out thousands of pairs of skates every year, and the greater part of the demand is domestic. Everybody must have skates, and the poor fellow who can not afford a shining new pair periodically, treasures the rusty old ones and burnishes and sharpens them as best he can.

That the sport is truly national is indicated by the fact that Queen Wilhelmina is herself a devotee. From childhood, the Queen has been exceedingly fond of skating. She is patroness of the "Nederlandsche Schaatsenrijders Bund" (The Netherlands Skating Club) which is a federation of all local clubs.

Skating Clubs.

In addition there are flourishing skating clubs in every village and even in rural centers. These local and provincial clubs make it their business to keep in condition all skating courses on canals and ditches, so that skating tourists may find these glassy highways open and passable throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Another function of the skating clubs is the organization of skating matches. Of these there are local and district contests to determine championships, and it is a proud youth who believes himself able to challenge all comers.

There are also contests in figure skating, but in this the Dutch acknowledge they are excelled by some other nationalities who have introduced refined methods into ice sport and practised scientifically in indoor rinks. Skating rinks are unknown in Holland.

Proud of Sport.

But the people of the Netherlands are proud of the universality of their sport. They do not sit upon benches to watch certain champions, but the entire nation takes to skating.

When frost glazes over the channels, the people go out by families to enjoy the sport. Those who are too young or too feeble to skate may be carried in arms or pushed in chairs.

It is noteworthy that many of the games played nowadays in all countries where ice sports are possible originated in the village on Thursday.

Among these are "bandy," a kind of ice hockey, and "kolf," which is said to be the forerunner of lacrosse.

After the Festivities

Any complaints? No!

You'll go a long way with Kruschen kiddies before you hear any. Sturdy, self-reliant, they're cast-iron little optimists who can be safely left to their own devices all the day long. Even Christmas festivities cannot upset them.

It's a safe thing to say that a fractious child is a sick child, to be treated accordingly. Listlessness, naughtiness, and "the sulks" more often than not are danger signals that you cannot afford to disregard. Generally, of course, there's nothing seriously the matter; perhaps the child is constipated, or has eaten something to disagree with the little inside. This much at least is certain. Until the source of the trouble is removed there will be unhappiness in the nursery and the home.

The best way to remedy the little people's little ills is to stir a tiny dose of Kruschen Salts into their breakfast cup of milk, tea or cocoa or bowl of porridge. Just about half a dimeful and they'll never know they're taking it, because it's quite tasteless given in this way.

The tiny dose gently but surely expels all clogging, poisonous matter from the small insides. Next day, the kiddies wake up with "that Kruschen feeling," bubbling over with energy and high spirits.

Don't wait for sickness to come. Buy a 75c bottle for the nursery today and be prepared. There are 320 children's doses to the bottle—nearly a year's supply.

CANADIAN POET, WITH NERVE AND NO CAPITAL REBUILT ANCIENT ORIENTAL CITY OF CANTON

Made Modern Metropolis of One of the Oldest Centres.

Tom MacInnes, the Canadian poet, accomplished one of the engineering miracles of history, when he persuaded the Oriental rulers of the ancient Chinese city of Canton to tear down their famous old walls, rip out thousands of buildings and change their ancient municipality into a thoroughly modern metropolis. Romantic yarns of all varieties concerning his accomplishment have credited him with a variety of super-human achievements. The articles below, which is correct to the last detail, tells in straightforward manner exactly what the brilliant Canadian poet-engineer did and exactly how he did it.

By W. A. DEACON

When in a weak position, attack; is a rule of military strategy that was put into effect with gratifying results in 1917, by Tom MacInnes of Vancouver, China and a few other places, now home for a shorter or longer time.

He has become internationally famous as the instigator of the project begun, eight years ago, for rebuilding and modernizing the great city of Canton.

Canton was known as the most congested city in the world. Within the six mile circumference of its circular, 30-foot thick walls there lived one million people, while another million and a half occupied a slightly larger area immediately outside the walls, and still another quarter of a million resided on sampans (boats) anchored in the Chu Kiang river. The principal business street, Wai Oi, leading from the east to the West Gate of the inner or walled, city was a little less than two miles in length and twelve feet wide. The other streets measured from twelve down to four feet in width. A Canadian would not have recognized most of them as streets. The only known way of transport, except walking, was by sedan. The streets were too narrow for rickshaws.

Into this teeming metropolis in December, 1916, came Tom MacInnes with nothing much in his pockets but his two hands, determined to retrive his momentarily fallen fortunes. Poet, lawyer and adventurer, he was about to enter on the most spectacular exploit of his colorful life, and, quite incidentally, revolutionize that great city, shaking it out of the shackles of its thousands of years of tradition. Looking over the ground, as he strolled for days among those alleys, surprisingly, clean considering the congestion, MacInnes dreamed a dream that was not to take shape in rhyme, like many a former one, but in prosaic concrete.

Though his plans had been discouraged by old China Hands (Europeans long resident in China), he went pluckily to meet the governor of the ancient city at a garden party; and here Fortune was kind in that the governor had with him that day Dr. Lin Tze-feng, who, as a member of the Chinese Embassy in London, had known MacInnes towards the end of 1914, and Judge Peter Hing, the first Chinese graduate of McGill. Between them, a private audience with the governor was arranged, and the nervy Canadian cooly stated his desire to tear down the ancient walls, rip out thousands of houses, make wide, straight boulevards and instal a tramway system.

Meeting after meeting followed at which MacInnes was cross-examined by high diplomats, engineers and an admiral. While convincing them of the desirability of his scheme, he had to conceal his lack of funds; and in connection therewith he played his most daring and brilliant card. Knowing Chinese customs well from long residence in the country, he was aware that at a certain stage in the proceedings cumshaw (customary presents) must be offered to the officials to secure their further attention. At this point, defying precedent, he demanded the sum of $2,000 for the expenses of a Canadian engineer's visit if the city fathers were in earnest about wanting to go into the matter further.

Money Was Promptly Paid.

The ruse worked like a charm; the money came promptly; and the author of the project was able to get some badly needed expert assistance from this side of the Pacific. Armed with his engineer's estimates, negotiations were resumed; but a small revolution came along to delay the work. And this was all in MacInnes' favor, too, for it allowed him the necessary time to arrange the financing of the vast enterprise, which was accomplished through application to Eng Hok-fong. Now this gentleman was a shipowner, a number of whose boats that formerly plied between the Orient and Mexico had been commandeered by the British and sunk by the Germans; and he, on the day MacInnes approached him was just in receipt of one million dollars on account of compensation. Liking the sound of the engineering venture, Eng Hok-fong furnished the required capital; and the concession to Tom MacInnes, Peter Hing and Sam Kee for the exclusive right to run a tramway in Canton and vicinity for twenty-five years was turned over to the Kwangtung Tramway Company, of which Eng Hok-fong was made president and managing director for life and Tom MacInnes one of the directors for an initial period of seven years. This position he still holds.

Work was begun in August, 1919, and went forward rapidly. Good luck continued in attendance. The removal of the great walls, which had first seemed so costly an operation, was done gratis since the contractors were satisfied to do the work for the material they would salvage. Now for centuries past thieves had been burying treasure in these walls—coins and jewels—and so great were the findings of this nature that the contractors reaped large profits, though the tramway company paid them not a cent.

In all, twenty-nine miles of paved streets varying from eighty-five to one hundred and fifty feet in width were cut straight east and west and north and south through the city, displacing, of course, thousands of buildings. The central twenty-five feet of each of these new thoroughfares is reserved as the right-of-way of the tramway company. And so Canton, the most difficult of all Chinese cities to modernize became startlingly modern suddenly.

At the last moment the tram idea gave place to motor buses of the latest type, except that they were divided into first and second class—each bus having a carrying capacity of twenty-three first class passengers and forty-five second class. The fares were ten and five cents respectively. Business hummed and again Canton led, in having the first public buses that ran on schedule time.

But the civil wars have been hard on the brave company. The armies wanted the buses for transport purposes. When General Chang's men would come to commandeer them, they promised to return them in good condition, which they always did, paying a fair rental for their use; but Dr. Sun Yat-sen's men were not so thoughtful. In 1922 MacInnes remained for nine months battling against adverse conditions, going through two revolutions in that time, and being nearly killed in June in the tramway office which was struck by five shots from Sun Yat-sen's cruisers dozens of civilians being killed in the vicinity of the building during the bombardment. But he found it impossible to keep his system operating, and returned to Canada late in 1922 in time to see his "Complete Poems" through the press—a volume as original and intriguing as this tale of him as a promoter.

They Can't Be Borrowed.

Before leaving China, he and his co-directors decided to give up the buses in favor of motor cars on tracks, for the especial reason that with flanged wheels they cannot be diverted for military purposes. The rails have been delivered but not laid and the latest word is that a loan of a million dollars is being floated to cover the cost of the new equipment and its installation. When peace comes the transit company look for their deserved, but now deferred, profits. But Tom MacInnes, with his intimate knowledge of Chinese affairs, may yet find some other sphere of usefulness to his country in China.

Out of his varied experiences in China, covering many years, he has many strange and fascinating tales to tell. One that cannot be omitted, and which is a favorite with him, is the finding of a stone idol that he could worship in sincerity. While making his preliminary explorations in Canton, he came upon the Temple of the Five Hundred Genii. Within it he found statues of great heroes, saints and teachers, among whom was one in medieval European dress. On learning from his guide that this was Marco Polo, the adored hero of his boyhood, he lit seven joss sticks and three red candles, and, while the acolyte beat a gong, bowed three times to the image, thereby acquiring a high reputation among the priests of that temple for his piety and scholarship.

ROAD INSURANCE MUCH CRITICIZED

Expenditure of $100 Subject of Discussion at Alnwick Nominations.

ELECTION TO BE HELD.

ROSENEATH, Dec. 31—Nominations for the township of Alnwick were held in the town hall, Roseneath, on Monday afternoon from one to two o'clock with about fifty ratepayers present and Jno. McMillan presiding. The following were nominated:

For Reeve

Harry Mouncey, proposed by Alex Shearer, seconded by N. D. Timlin.

Wm. Arnold, proposed by R. McCracken, seconded by F. T. Shearer.

For Councillors

Gordon Parker, proposed by S. A. Tucker, seconded by Jas. A. Brown.

Irwin Brown, proposed by Alex Shearer, seconded by Percy Baker.

Ernest Timlin, proposed by E. T. Shearer, seconded by R. McCracken.

E. T. Shearer, proposed by R. McCracken, seconded by C. W. Varcoe.

J. T. Drope, proposed by Jas. Webb, seconded by Wm. Arnold.

Addresses were delivered by the candidates after the nomination. Reeve Mouncey confined his words to the work of the county council, and when he was through asked for discussion. Councillor Parker defended the work of the council, including the road insurance. Councillors Braithwaite and Brown thanked the ratepayers for past support and said they would both be in the race. Councillor Timlin said that it had been a great experience for him and stated that he had not been in favor of the insurance and when asked about the Chidley road explained it as fully as he could.

One of the main items that received some severe criticism from the new men was the road insurance question to which they were all strongly opposed. Mr. Shearer said that he thought it was $100 thrown away because the 33 pathmasters ought to be able to keep the road in shape to prevent serious accidents.

Mr. J. G. Drope, an ex-councillor and who also had a nomination, delivered the address of the day. He said that he had been attending nomination meetings for the past 25 years and he thought the people were losing interest in their township affairs. He thought it was the duty of every ratepayer to attend nomination. When he received his tax bill this year he was stunned and hadn't fully recovered, and one councillor had said they would not be any lower next year. He said that some men were nominated for a joke and then elected, and he didn't see where people expected to get off at as long as they continued that practice. He said he thought criticism was good for any councillors and would make better men of hem. If their work during the year wouldn't stand criticism and come out on top the quicker they were out the better. He had heard it rumored at the first of the year that Reeve Mauncey was going to be a shining star, the champion of economy, and yet taxes were still higher this year. He said that candidates seeking election passed over the important items on nomination day for fear of defeat. He was not in favor of road insurance if the council would spend that $100 every year in repairing the roads it would be farther ahead. He criticized the action of the council in paying the Royal Bank $5 to help collect the taxes when they had a bonded tax collector hired for the job. The county council carried on a lot of useless expenditure and it seemed impossible to elect a man who would go there and fight it. He had no intention of being in the race as he did not have the time at his disposal which he thought he ought to spend should he be elected but he wished them all that their lives for the coming year would be full of sunshine and happiness.

Mr. McCracken said that he thought that the insurance was a waste of money. He had heard a lot of complaining outside on different years but when it came to nomination nobody had a word to say.

In reply Reeve Mauncey said he was pleased with the discussion. He said that when the insurance was passed they did not know what the majority of the people wanted. Had they known they could have voted differently. If it was wrong how was it that every township but two in Durham had taken it out?

Councilor Parker said he was in favor of it at that time and was yet and he thought that the objection was merely an election plea.

Messrs. Mauncey and Arnold have qualified for the reeveship, and Messrs. Parker, Timlin, Brown, Braithwaite, Shearer and McCracken for councillors.

Reeve Mauncey spent three years as councilor then was out three years and came back last year and won out. Mr. Arnold sat at the board as councillor for four years but was defeated last year in a three cornered fight for the reeveship.

Mr. Parker has spent three years at the board. Messrs. Brown, Braithwaite and Timlin have each put in one year. Mr. Shearer sat at the board as councillor for three years but was defeated last year in the reeveship fight. Mr. McCracken is the only new man, having had no previous experience in the council board.

Mr. Davey, the tax collector, explained that he had paid the bank $5 as well as the council. This had been done for the convenience of the ratepayers in paying their taxes.

CLERICAL TOYMAKER OFFERED POSITIONS

Would Involve Leaving Ministry So He Declines.

LONDON, Eng., Dec. 30.—(Canadian Press).—The Rev. William Binch, rector of All Saints', West Gorton, Manchester, combines with his clerical duties the making of toys. Some of these toys, which have been given to his church bazaars, are valued at as much as £70.

A local gentleman has offered to provide financial backing if Mr. Binch will start business as a toymaker, and a London firm has made him an offer of close on £1,000 a year if he will join their toy-designing staff, but as both these offers would involve leaving the ministry, he has declined them.

At present he rector is engaged on the making of a large doll's house, which will be complete even to the handles on the doors and little flights of stairs, ingeniously carved. All the toy-making work is being done at the rectory, where there are many evidences of the rector's great skill with tools.

MAYOR TURNER IS COMMENDED FINAL MEETING

His Honor Judge Huycke and Other Police Commissioners Present Congratulations.

EXPERIENCE VALUABLE

Mayor Turner Stated That Experience as Leader of City Was of Benefit.

Commendation and praise was the mede tendered to His Worship Mayor Turner on the occasion of his final official appearance as a member of the Police Commission. His Honor Judge Huycke took the initiative and commended the Mayor on the ability and dignity which had characterized him as leader of the city. He had hoped that Mr Turner might have been prevailed upon to accept nomination again and continue the valuable service which he had rendered the city during his past term of office. Judge Huycke declared that the police force was in splendid condition, a fact which was largely due to the business-like manner with which Mr. Turner had carried out the work. It was with regret, he concluded, that the Commission bade farewell to His Worship Mayor Turner.

Magistrate Langley and Chief Newhall concurred with the sentiments expressed by His Honor Judge Huycke.

His Worship Mayor Turner stated that he was leaving municipal affairs a bigger and better man. The experience in the Council had been invaluable, and although there had been criticism that was expected by most people in public life.

Chief Newhall reported that the car which had been purchased for the police department was satisfactory in every respect. He said that there were certain funds left over, and recommended that they be turned over to R. R. Hall, K.C., in part payment for his services as counsel in defence of the charges laid by the Provincial License Committee.

The Chief presented his report. From January 1 to November 30 the expenditures amounted to $18,590.36. For the month of November the amount was $1,641.47, making a total for the first of December of $20,237.83.

Other accounts were read and passed.

Present were: His Honor Judge Huycke, His Worship Mayor Turner, His Worship Magistrate O. A. Langley and Chief of Police Samuel Newhall.

RAILWAY VALUE MUCH ENHANCED SAYS THORNTON

Net Revenue $3,000,000 in 1922, Is $30,000,000 This Year.

NEW YEAR MESSAGE.

C.N.R. Has Won Confidence of Public, President Asserts.

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 31.—An appreciable enhancement in value of the Canadian National Railways to the people of the Dominion was indicated by Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., chairman and president, during the course of a special New Year's message delivered last night in Montreal and broadcast simultaneously from three of the stations operated by the radio department of the system.

Sir Henry summarized the three-year period which has elapsed since the system was brought under one central direction and the present administration placed in charge. He expressed appreciation of the excellent foundation laid by the two previous administrations, adding: "The constructive work performed by the management of that day has gone far to assist in the subsequent development of the property."

In his review of subsequent events, Sir Henry stated that with the loyal, enthusiastic and efficient support of the officers and men many things had been accomplished: "First, we have increased the net revenue from railway operations from approximately three million dollars in 1922 to what will approximate thirty million dollars in 1925, an increase of about nine hundred per cent. Capitalizing this result, and assuming that a five per cent. return on capital is reasonable, we find that in 1922 the net result from operation represented five per cent. on sixty million dollars, which is to say, the value of the property to the people of Canada based on earning capacity has been increased from sixty to six hundred million dollars. This improvement has been largely the result of decreased expenses, the result of increased efficiency."

C.N.R. Wins Confidence.

While the financial results were gratifying, the president considered that there were other achievements for which officers and employees might take a justifiable pride, the most important being the respect and confidence gained in the transportation world and amongst the people served. In the technique of the profession notable advancement had been made in improved methods and in progressive work and is continuing. "I particularly mention the development of the Diesel electric motor vehicle which will go a long way towards a solution of branch line problems and motor bus competition," said Sir Henry.

Continuing, he president said: "The future of the Canadian National Railway System depends entirely on the future of the Dominion, and I believe from both a Canadian and an Imperial point of view, that we stand on the threshold of a period of prosperity of considerable duration." Sir Henry indicated that this prosperity would follow as a result of the increasing standard of living with its consequent demand for better food which would necessarily react upon Canada where the foundation of prosperity rests very largely on the products of the soil.

More Team Work.

After reiterating his optimism which he declared to be based on sane reasoning, Sir Henry ventured a suggestion: "I think more team work, more tolerance, and less sectional dispute would contribute more to our development than any other single thing. The aspirations of all sections of our Dominion are the same, but the methods of achievement are not always calculated to promote that unity which is essential to weld the Dominion into a great and powerful nation."

LATEST FIGURES.

Total For Eleven Months of This Year Was $1,903,780,686.

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 31 (By Canadian Press).—The sum of Canada's trade in 1925 will greatly exceed that of 1924. The latest figures available at the Bureau of Statistics show that in the eleven months ended November 30, 1925, the total of the Dominion's trade was $1,903,780,686. In the whole twelve months of 1924 the total trade was valued at $1,866,253,471. Figures for December, 1925, are not available but if the current month shows as high a trade as last year the increase in 1925 over 1924 will be around $225,000,000.

Imports during 1925, in the eleven months of record, are valued at $813,349,060. Exports totalled $1,090,431,626. In the corresponding period of 1924, imports reached $747,249,085 and exports $933,628,436, making a total trade for that period of $1,680,877,520.

Customs Duty Higher.

The total duty collected on Canadian imports will be approximately $20,000,000 higher in 1925 than in 1924, $15,000,000 higher in 1925 than in 1924. In the eleven months ended November 30, total duty collected was $135,069,664. For the same period in 1924 it was less than $115,000,000.

One comparison made in a statement just issued in that of "Favorable Trade Balances." Between 1921 and 1925 the balance between exports and imports has risen from $55,000,000 to nearly $358,000,000 on the credit side of the ledger in the eleven months of record.

This year is is about $100,000,000 better than last year. The increase is chiefly in products of the farm and forest. In agricultural and vegetable products alone the increase was about $65,000,000, in animal products about $50,000,000, in wood and paper about $20,000,000. Non-ferrous metals are the next most active exports. They reached a total of $103,263,496 in the eleven months.

POPE APPEALS FOR CHURCH UNITY

In Prayer at Inauguration of New Church Feast.

ROME, Dec. 31 (United Press).—A far-reaching appeal for church unity was seen in the Pope's prayer at the Papal Mass in commemoration of the new church feast of "Christ the King." The prayer invoked the "reign of Christ," and instead of the usual formula of exhortation to "those outside Christianity" was modified to include "Pagans, Mohammedans and Jews." Forty thousand persons filled St. Peter's Basilica for the ceremony, which was marked by the usual splendor of Vatican functions and lasted three hours.

Emigration Offices Already Inundated

By H. BAILEY.

LONDON, Dec. 31.— (British United Press.)—Although the new emigration schemes comes into effect to-morrow, few immigrants are expected to leave for Canada before March. The emigration offices are already submerged with enquiries, but the business of sorting out the applicants and selecting the right men will take some time. It is expected, however, that by March the flow of emigrants will begin with real momentum and will continue increasingly thereafter.

HUSBAND FREED FROM CHARGE OF KILLING WIFE

Montreal Jury Verdict Against One or More Unknown Persons.

BROTHER FREE, TOO.

Rodolphe Dupuis Proved Good Alibi—Police Seeking Slayers.

MONTREAL, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—After many witnesses had been heard, Romuald Dupuis, husband of Berthe Dupuis, the young woman who was murdered about midnight on December 16, was allowed his liberty after the coroner's jury returned a verdict yesterday afternoon, against "one or more unknown persons." Dupuis promised to do all he could to aid the police in attempting to discover the slayers of his wife.

The chief evidence of interest was that of Dupuis, who has been held as a witness on the coroner's order, and that of his brother, Rodolphe Dupuis, who was also held for some time but liberated when an alibi was established showing that he could not possibly have had anything to do with the crime.

In the course of his declaration, Romuald Dupuis said that both he and another of his brothers, Armand Dupuis, had suspected Rodolphe of killing the young woman, the motive being vengeance. He also spoke of "a strange expression" on Rodolphe's face about the time of the murder, but finally declared: "I thank God that it is not Rodolphe. He has established a good alibi. After his alibi, I no longer suspect him."

In outlining the case to the jury, Coroner McMahon sifted the evidence of the many witnesses, and showed that the motive was not theft, robbery, or seduction. Everything pointed to its being an "inside" crime, with raging jealousy as the motive.

Final Session Strong Winnipeg Electric Feature

TORONTO, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press) —The market was strong during the year's last sessions of the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day and a broad list was dealt in. Sudden prominence of Winnipeg Electric was a feature, it selling up a point and three-quarters at 48 3-4.

Two other generally quiet stocks registered substantial advances, Mackay Common selling two and a half higher at 138 and Canada Bread Common two higher at 62. Brazilian and Smelters were again leaders with Winnipeg also outstanding, Smelters receded during the session to 178, recovering to 182 at the morning close for a slight gain.

Brazilian advanced a half at 82 1-2. The active Canadian Canners issues were among few weak stocks, selling fractionally lower, Provincial Paper, Sugar preferred, British Columbia fishing, Bell Telephone and Davies were all stronger.

Canadian General Electric preferred was marked down two at 55.

SCORE 5-2.

HAMILTON, Dec. 3 (Canadian Press)—A 5-2 victory over the Rowing Club was the successful manner in which Toronto Canoe Club opened the O.H.A. senior season here last night. For a time it looked as if the oarsmen were not ever going to tally, but they came through in the final. The attendance was about 700. Arkell, in the local nets, was kept busy, while Starke, the Toronto goal keeper, kept Hamilton from tallying on several occasions and it was his nice work which kept the margin down.

APPLES MARKED TRAIL OF HORSE

Runaway Animal Upset and Smashed Cutter Full of Fruit.

MAIL BOX DOWN.

Numerous apples scattered over the street, and a post office box knocked from its supports, bear mute testimony to the narrow escape from injury of a market gardener engaged in bringing his wares to the city this morning. While crossing George street on McDonnell street the horse from some cause took fright, overturning the cutter and throwing the occupant on to the road. The horse continued its mad career by tearing down McDonnel street at a break-neck pace, until when attempting to turn the corner at Water street it slipped on the icy surface, and while endeavoring to regain its balance propelled itself directly towards F. W. Burnham's store window. A telegraph pole luckily intervened and the store window was saved at the expense of a mail box, which became detached as a result of the collision. The horse appeared to be al right after its jaunt and was able to proceed on its way drawing another cutter.

BIOLOGISTS MEET.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press).—Theories upon which "rejuvenation" operation is based have been proven false, in the opinion of physiologists attending the annual convention of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

These conclusions were drawn from Dr. R. N. Oslund of the University of Illinois, made public yesterday.

The cause of pernicious anaemia, long a hystery, was believed to have been solved by Dr. C. D. Leake, University of Wisconsin, and Dr. J. I. Farrell, North Western University. Lack of acids in the gastric juices of anaemic patients had been observed for some time, but it was thought to be an effect of the disease. Dr. Leake and Dr. Farrell are said to have proved that it is the cause.

A NEW BEGINNING

He takes our yesterdays, dimmed and old.
Worn with sorrow and sinning,
And gives us instead, with a grace untold,
The dawn's pure dew and the year's fresh gold,
He gives us a new beginning.

OFFICERS ENTERTAINED.

Sanctorum Heads and Degree Staff Guests of Degree Captain.

The trail of the officers and degree staff of Cyzicus Sanctorum. No. 24, Ancient Mystic Order of Samaritans led last evening to the tent of their popular degree captain Fred Read, where an unusually interesting programme of wholesome entertainment was planned for the coming winter months, in connection with the new work provided for in this up-to-date organization.

After business was disposed of, and at the cordial invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Read, chairs were filled around the dining-table, where a full course dinner was laid, and ample justice done to the good things provided, after which singing was in order for a time, followed by an enthusiastic and hearty vote of thanks to their genial host and hostess; the singing of "They Are Jolly Good Fellows," followed by three times three, and then all made trek for their several homes, after a most enjoyable and profitable evening.

OWEN SOUND MAN GAGGED AND ROBBED

Conrad Stearnall's Alleged Assailants Have Been Arrested.

OWEN SOUND, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press)—Pounced upon by three men as he went from his grocery store to attend his horse last night, Conrad Stearnall was bound and gagged. The men alleged to have committed the attack, and who are charged with later entering Stearnall's home and after ransacking the place, taking $10 and watch, are Alex Morgan and Art Douglas, colored, and James Hutton. They were arrested a short time after the assault and robbery was discovered.

IN POLICE COURT.

Habitues of the police court this morning witnessed the strange spectacle of a youth charged with being intoxicated in a public place, call in his defence one of the constables who had effected his arrest.

Last night two youths, according to the evidence of C. Miller, came down to the rink in King Edward Park and were a general nuisance because of their intoxicated condition, and the obscene language they used in consequence. Mr. Miller had noticed that both had bottles containing some liquid but said that one of the youths was not as troublesome as the other and had permitted him to skate on the rink, provided that he 'ditch' the bottle.

As the young men persisted in being nuisances, and used language which was out of place, he felt justified in calling the police. When they arrived on the scene both of the youths set off across the park but were captured. One of the young men in defence said that the liquid in his bottle was wine and had been procured at his home; he had had three drinks from his companion's bottle but "just enough to put a smell on his breath." He maintained that any one who was able to go into a hot rink house, take off his boots and put on skating equipment, and then go out on the ice, could not be drunk.

Sergeant Thomas called for the defence, said that the prisoners when brought to the station used bad language to such an extent that they could be heard out on Water street. They were calling to one another between the cells and were shouting opprobious epithets concerning the police. Cross-examined by the chief, he declared that the prisoner was unquestionably drunk.

Magistrate Langley found that the prisoner was drunk and that the case was particularly aggravating because the youths went among the children at the rink and persisted in the use of doubtful language. As it was a second offence, and one of a grave nature the minimum fine could not be imposed so they were assessed $20.00 and costs for their pre-New Years spree.

A Happy And Prosperous New Year.

TO ALL THE CITIZENS IN PETERBOROUGH, to the Farming Community in the County, and to Every One in the Central Ontario District, I desire to give thanks on behalf of the Board for the splendid co-operation and support afforded to the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition in the past year, and to express the hope that the same interest in this splendid cause will be exhibited in the future.

It is an excellent work in which all should take part, as I know of nothing that cements rural and urban sections as much, gives the same clean amusement at an off season of the year, or gives as much pleasure and satisfaction throughout the whole year to all who interest themselves in it, as does the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition.

Again wishing You All a Very Happy New Year, I beg to remain, on behalf of the Board.

SYNOPSIS

David Lacy, meeting Connemara Moore on the beach at dawn had led her on a five-mile jaunt to his farmhouse, where Lacy's housekeeper supplied the girl with dry clothing. Connie needed it, for she had swam to land from a yacht far out in Long Island Sound. And now at Lacy's house there suddenly appears Sweetie whom Connemara had encountered several times the night before. Conne was to have announced her engagement last night but, instead, disappeared from Aunt Celimena's Connecticut home.

But Sweetie was alone. "Don't be alarmed, dearie," she reassured the startled girl at the desk, "I'm as much alone as a small pox patient. You can't imagine how good it feels to get into a nice clean home where the most exciting event of the week is ice cream on Sunday."

Connemara did not fall into the mood of Sweetie's opening speech, however. "How did you get here?" she asked, abruptly.

"Now don't get Ritzy, dearie"—here Sweetie put a hand on Connemara's shoulder. "I could tell you that I flew here on the wings of Opportunity or paddled over in Mark Antony's gondola. But I won't. You're one girl in a million, and I want you to be my friend if you [illegible]."

"Well?"

"Well, there's no mystery about my being here myself. When your classy gentleman friend escaped from the gang I simply did [illegible] myself and followed him. I [illegible] you, but you didn't surprise me. I saw him bring you here."

"Is that all you saw?"

"Well, I may have seen a few other things too, girlie. But don't get me wrong. I'm with you since I spilled the history of my life [illegible] night while I was transforming your [illegible]'s costume into a Fifth Avenue model with a few deft touches of my lily-white hands. Yes, I broadcasted a chapter of my early life and tipped off the cruel fact that an honest heart beats beneath these tattered rags." She made a mock gesture typifying the wronged working girl, but the next instant she was quite serious. "You've got something that I never had—a chance."

Connemara sat listening to this half-humorous, half-emotional outburst with a feeling of slowly-dawning guilt. Here she was, though at present slightly worn and down-at-the-heels from her unusual experiences of the last few hours, still a girl of culture with every opportunity to get the best that life had to give. Just a bath and a visit to her elaborate wardrobe and she would be a lady again.

But what about the girl before her? Where would Sweetie go? What friends would help her along the right path?

Before Connemara had a chance to assemble her thoughts into the proper words Sweetie resumed, "I'm coming clean with you, kid. I'm a bad girl and I admit it. While the going is good you get a certain kick out of doing something wrong and getting away with it. You never think of the future. You grab yourself off a little excitement and let it go at that. But when it starts to go against you, then you begin to think of papa and mama. That's what I'm doing now. The gang is about cooked and I want to get away. They'll all be in jail before they know it, and I don't want to go with them." Her eyes were glazed with a film of tears.

Connemara got up from her chair and impulsively slid her arm around the other girl's shoulders. There was a silence—the silence of feminine understanding—as they stood together.

"I'm just a selfish, good-for-nothing bobbed—" here Connemara checked herself. With a slight intake of breath she went on. "I'll take you to Mooreslands and we can pretend you're my personal maid until the excitement dies down. Then you'll be free to go wherever you like."

Sweetie planted a resounding smack on the cheek of Connemara leaving a red spot to take the place of the rouge that had been overlooked in the latter's routine that morning. But Connemara had been brought back to stern reality with a jolt. One look at the ex-shop-girl's get-up and their plans seemed to totter. "Sweetie," she exclaimed, "do you realize I can't employ a personal maid who wears dilapidated flannel trousers—and ones that fit terribly at that?"

Glancing down with a giggle, Sweetie realized she was still wearing Lacy's much-abused suit which made her resemble her late gentlemen associates. "Sure, I must get rid of this hand-me-down. Here I am trying to stage a comeback in clothes that make me look like Captain Kidd's twin brother."

Connemara broke in. "There must be another collection of clothes upstairs in Mrs. Parker's room. That's where I got these. You know, she's the housekeeper and she's a terrible prude. We mustn't let her know you're in the house. If she finds out there are two of us here, she will think the Sultan of Turkey moved in with his whole harem."

Together the two tiptoed upstairs and proceeded to overhaul the poor, unsuspecting housekeeper's treasure of mid-Victorian wearing apparel. But just as Connemara was forcing the receptive Sweetie into one of those mutton-sleeved shirtwaists that give the wearer the appearance of an army scout balloon, footsteps were heard on the stairway. Connemara gathered up the litter of lace and calico on the floor, took a dive into the old-fashioned wardrobe and pulled the half-clad Sweetie in after her, closing the door just as Miss Liddy herself breezed into the room.

The two girls had just gone through a night of terrifying adventure, yet not one of those demoniac reprobates who had taken part in the nightmare of horror had scared them half as much as the prim little housekeeper who had come into their lives so recently.

But Liddy's visit was strangely uneventful. It was one of those little incidents that happen in the lives of middle-aged ladies of no particular worldly affiliations. For want of something better to do they go to their rooms, make sure the rooms are still there, and then walk out. Perhaps each room contains the imaginary child of an imaginary lover. Who knows?

Anyway, Liddy left in a moment or two, and the girls emerged from the dark closet to complete Sweetie's transformation. Liddy continued on her way downstairs, where she engaged herself for the next hour or so in sweeping and dusting, and occasionally taking a sly look at her image in the mirror, giving herself the secret treat of a slight flirtation with the emotion of vanity.

Connemara and Sweetie dared not come down for fear of being put bodily out of the house. So they could do nothing but remain in Liddy's room and await developments. They did not have long to wait.

Soon the hum of a motor could be heard, and a car drove up containing Mr. David Lacy, Mr. Brewster—the ever-present family lawyer—and a forlorn bundle of once-elegant heaving humanity that the bluebloods of Stamford were wont to hail as Aunt Celimena.

Lacy and his rescue party had had no trouble in locating the little inlet in which he had left the Filomena and her captors the night before, but though the motor boat was still visible, her sharp white nose now poked up into a mud bank left by the receding tide; she had appeared, from the bank above, to be entirely deserted.

Investigation however, disclosed the figures of Aunt Celimena and Mr. Brewster trussed up neatly and securely, and laid side by side in the cockpit, for all the world like two rather shapeless packages waiting for the expressman.

A THREE DAYS' COUGH IS YOUR DANGER SIGNAL

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, and emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action, it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other fords of throat trouble. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchical asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to direction. Ask your druggist Creomulsion Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The concert was held in the church, the principal item of the programme being a play, entitled, "Christmas Day at Stebbino," given by friends from Haultain, of whom quite a number attended the concert, making the trip in Mr. G. Stephen's motor bus. Rev. I. W. Ogden presided and gave a reading. Recitations were given by Masters John McFadden, Gerald Carr, Cyril Ogden, Raymond Reynolds; duets by Miss Ella and Mr. Roy Brown; trio by Messrs. Northey, Wilson and Lean.

The recitations by a number of little folk were much enjoyed, as the selections were well chosen and given with clear voices. The duetts, solos and quartette were much appreciated. HOGMANAY—A SCOTTISH FESTIVAL

Some Quaint New Year Observances From Early Periods.

CUSTOMS MAINTAINED.

"Hogmanay" Fully Explained—Rhymes of Auld Scotia Recalled.

(By S. L.)

The coming of the New Year has been celebrated in a variety of ways for many years. Thus, some seven hundred years before the beginning of the Christian era, a feast was instituted and dedicated to Janus, the fabled deity who presided over the New Year. Janus was a two-headed god who was held in great reverence by the Romans, and after whom January was fittingly called, as looking both back and forward in time. His temple was never closed except in time of absolute peace, and in the whole history of ancient Rome (700 years) this occurred three times, one of the times coinciding, curiously, with the birth of Christ. The credit for this pleasant innovation is traditionally accorded to Numa, the Roman king, who was a philosophic legislator and founding the chief religious institutions, also established the priesthood, the augurs and vestals.

It was on New Year's Day that the Romans sacrificed to Janus a cake of sifted meal, with salt, incense and wine. On that day, too, the mechanics began something of their art of trade, the men of letters followed suit with their books of poems, and the consuls took the chair and entered upon their term of office.

Titus, Originator.

The origin of New Year's gifts amongst the Romans is ascribed to Titus, King of the Sabines. It appears that this monarch, regarding as a good omen a gift on New Year's Day of some branches cut in a wood consecrated to Strenia, goddess of strength, authorised the custom and gave the gifts the name of "strenae."

The custom of celebrating New Year's Day has been honoured in various countries for centuries, and the Continental observances of modern times are but a continuation of the practice which has been pursued for hundreds of years—whilst the festival of Christmas attracts a larger share of attention in England and Canada than is bestowed upon the New Year celebration, while the New Year observances in Auld Scotia assume the greater importance.

Christmas Not a Holiday.

Christmas is not a statutory holiday in the Land o' Cakes, escepe for bank employees and school students. According to tradition, this is because, at the Scottish Reformation, it was decided that no day should be kept as a Holy Day except Sunday, but now the Scots are beginning to recognize that the birthday of the little Christ-child should be remembered.

"Hogmanay" Explained.

To many in this city the expression "Hogmany" has been a puzzle and the writer has been requested many a time to define the meaning. The explanation is simple enough. Hogmanay, as we are reminded by Robert Chambers, "is the universal popular name in Scotland for the last day of the year." It is a day of high festival among young and old, but particularly the younger element who do not regard any of the rest of the Daft Days with half so much interest. In that sense, the Hogmanay Festival of a century ago resembled the modern Christmas celebration, which has nowadays become a period of delight for the children.

Old Customs Maintained.

The record made by Chambers assures us that in his day in a town in whe East of Scotland—which was secluded from other places, maintained old customs with considerable purity—the children of the poorer people (all of them, without exception of age or sex, if only able to walk), got themselves tied at an early hour into large aprons or sheets, the lower corners of which were turned up in front, so as to form each into a vast pocket or refectory. Thus accoutred, the youngsters went in families or bands to the doors of all the well-to-do people to collect an alms of oaten bread. This was in accordance with an immemorial custom. Each child received a quadrant section of oatcake, sometimes, in the case of particular favorites, improved by an addition of cheese.

Old Rhymes Recalled.

This was called their "homganay." The housewives, in expectation of the large demands thus made upon them, busied themselves for several days before hand in preparing an adequate quantity of cakes, and the chronicler declares that a particular person frequently resolved two bolls of meal into Hogmanay cakes. When the children approached the doors they cried "Hogmanay!" This was in itself a sufficient announcement of their demands, but there were other cries which were used for the same purpose. One of these were:—

"Hogmanay,
Toololay,
Give us some of your white bread and none of your grey."

Amongst many cries appropriate to the morning of Hogmanay, the chronicler set forth this quatrain of less puerile than some of the others:—

"Get up, guidwife, and shake your feathers,
And dinna think that we are beggars,
For we are bairns come out to play;
Get up and gie's our Hogmanay."

Another was described as of a moralising character, though a good deal of a treasure:—

"Get up, guidwife, and dinna sweir,
And deal your bread to them that's here,
For the time will come when you'll be dead,
And then ye'll neither need ale nor bread."

The most favorite of all, however, was more laconic and to the point:—

"My feet's cold, my shoon's thin;
Gie's a piece and let's rin.

"Quizzards" Busy.

On the evening of the great day the "quizzards" were busy. The boys concerned donned old shirts belonging to their fathers, and mounted casques of brown paper shaped so like a mitre that the recorder concluded that they were borrowed from the Abbot of Unreason. To the casque was attached a sheet of paper which concealed the face of the wearer, except where holes were made to let through the point of the nose and afford sight to the eyes and breath to the mouth. Each quizzard was attended by a personage dressed as a girl, with an old woman's cap and a broomstick. This companion was styled "Bessie" and "she?" waited upon her principal and performed various antics with the idea of gaining a monetary reward.

Chambers referred to a very curious New Year's Day custom of the Scottish Highlands. Young and old assembled and performed a strange ceremony. One of the strongest of the party dragged behind him a dried cowhide, and the rest followed, beating it with sticks, at the same time singing the quaint rhyme. After going round the house three times they halted at the door and extolled the hospitality of the occupiers. They were, thereupon regaled with bread, butter cheese and whiskey. Before leaving the house one of the party burned the breast part of the skin of a sheep and put it to the nose of everyone to smell "as a charm against witchcraft and every infection.

Gift Giving in Scotland.

Reference to New Year's gifts reminds one that the custom of giving was formerly extensively carried out in Scotland. For example, it is on record that James IV. had a gift of ten angels presented to him in bed on New Year's morning, together with a candle. On the first day of the year 1490-1, the same monarch presented "Blind Harry," the minstrel and author of the "Life of Wallace," with eighteen shillings (four and a half dollars), which was looked upon as a lot of money. On New Year's Day of 1507, the King gave to various minstrels the aggregate sum of forty-one pounds sixteen shillings ($211). The custom of giving and receiving New Year gifts was more common at the Court of James VI., and diverting comment upon the circumstances is that James "was exactly the kind of man to give encouragement to, at least, one branch of the system."

Hour of Sadness.

To many in the city, the waiting of the New Year and the stroke of twelve is an hour of sadness because they turn their thoughts on the year that shall never return and trust in Providence that the incoming year be a blessing to all. As the hour approaches the thoughts of many local Scots and citizens go back to Auld Scotia, even the "fullness of heart and eye" being visible in many as the old song is recalled—chorus:

"A guid New Year tae ane and a' and many may ye see;

BRITAIN NEEDS LABOR HARMONY TO HELP TRADE

Spirit of Good Will In Industry Essential to 1926 Success.

EMULATE U.S.A.

Principle of the Square Deal Urged By the Industrialist.

LONDON, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press)—Great expectations for 1926 are held out by the optimists among industrial experts, while about an equal number of observers have pessimistic views, which are expressed in a review on shipping and commerce as published in a supplement to "Lloyd's List and Shipping Gazette."

Co-operation of labor and capital and the idea of square dealing as practiced in the United States are referred to by Colonel Vernon F. Willey, president of the Federation of British Industry, who has recently returned from America. He advises Great Britain to adopt the good will spirit and help to pull over the hill.

"We start the New Year facing many difficulties," writes Colonel Willey, "but with the knowledge that our position is improved and that many of the most serious obstacles are behind us, industry and trade need only the spirit of good will to carry us to success, and in this respect we might well take advice from the United States, where industrial strife is discounted because it has been proven that it does not pay."

Learn from America

"Cannot we overcome our insularity," he asks, "and learn from a nation which now is more happily placed than ourselves?"

John Denholm, president of the Chamber of Commerce, writes: "We have touched the depression bottom, may begin to look for improvement. With the prospect since Locarno of a better feling in European relations we may hope for the return of that confidence which is necessary for prosperity."

The experts agree that Italy is showing a shipbuilding revival, while reports indicate that the depression in Germany is likely to continue.

Manitoba Potatoes Higher On United States' Demand

WINNIPEG, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—Buyers from the United States have invaded Manitoba in an effort to fill large orders for potatoes to take care of the demand across the border.

The agents are offering liberal prices, going as high as $1.35 a bushel per carload lot. As a result of this pressure, the retail price of potatoes has advanced to $1.75 a bushel.

Some of the produce merchants predict the price will reach the $2.00 mark. If the present demand continues, and it is reported that farmers are holding their supplies off the market in anticipation of such a rise.

UTILITIES COMMISSION

of storm drains but the actual laying of pavement may be deferred for a term of years.

While it was true that the debenture debt was $4,000,000, Mr. Phelan protested that the city was in a good financial condition—as good, he declared, if not better, than other city of similar size in the Dominion. Peterboro bonds sold at a better rate than was obtainable by any other city and a great deal of the credit was due to the efficient operation of the City Trust. He said he was not in favor of any vast expenditure of funds without the sanction of the people

Robert Hicks.

Ladies had more to do with the Utilities than the men in many instances, said Robert Hicks, and bore out his statement by quoting figures, which showed the domestic consumption of water and electric current was greater than either the commercial or industrial use. He said that the profits had increased so that higher charges for power could be absorbed and a surplus still remain at the end of the year. Mr. Hicks felt that after 17 years of service, during which period no direct charge had been laid against him, he felt that he merited the further confidence of the electors.

Gordon Matthews.

Mr. Matthews said that the deficiency in the water service collected from the Canadian Packing plant was more than made up by the benefit which the plant was to the city as a source of capital, and instanced the value of the payroll, and a market centre which it provides the surrounding community. If Peterboro is to grow, he said, and become a bigger and better city, it should encourage industries to locate, and not palce obstcales in their patch.

On the conclusion of Mr. Matthews' address and previous to calling upon Mr. Ackerman, Mrs. Stevenson declared that the women of the city were vitally interested in the Utilities Commission, and she thought it would be expedient for some of the profits, which Mr. Hicks reported to be shared with the consumers in the form of lowered rates.

Charles H. Ackerman.

Mr. Ackerman said that he would have the necessary time to devote to aldermanic duties. He could sense that there would be a controversy about the school problem, and that the supporters of both sides should be granted an attentive hearing. He would not commit himself at present, he declared, because of the number of angles involved. Mr. Ackerman expressed his indebtedness to Mrs. Morris for information which she had supplied him. The trouble now was resulting from a premature application of the Adolescent Act, he thought, and it was either necessary to stand back of the legislation and grant the required educational facilities or repudiate the enactment and throw down the gauntlet to the province. In any case, he purposed comparing tax rates of Peterboro with those of other cities with a view to arriving at some definite conclusion. He was prepared to act upon his own judgment when the time came.

John Marshall.

That this was a critical time and that Peterboro was passing through a period which would either make or mar it, and conclude whether it was to be a big city or one of no importance, was the opinion of John Marshall. To have an industrial city it was essential that there be attractions in the form of low tax rates and up-to-date conveniences. Mechanics intending to come to Peterboro would naturally ask about the educational facilities, for the workman or mechanic has the same right to educate his children along vocational lines as other citizens have to prepare their children for a profession. A city was bound to extend those privileges. It was necessary that the city provide greater accommodation as it was no incentive for the studious to learn that others not so interested in academic pursuits as they were pushed onward, driven by the crush of those behind to equal rank as held by the brighter students.

If the school may be built without unduly increasing the expense for ratepayers, he would give it his support. Before large amounts of money are granted in future the great need for a school should receive the first consideration. Mr. Marshall claimed that the retiring Council should not have deferred the petty questions of daylight saving and Sunday bathing to the people, but should have shouldered the responsibility and dealt with the issues as they saw fit. He declared them too trivial matters to have been brought before the people.

C. A. MacDonald.

Mr. MacDonald stated that he had never before ventured before the people in search of public honors. He declared that he was relieved to know the city was in such a good financial condition, as Mr. Phelan had reported. The main issue in the election of the city directorate was not Sunday bathing, daylight saving or the school extension, but the city as a whole. It was important to see that the money collected was expended properly. He said he was not in favor of spending another dollar on new paving until the streets already paved were put in proper condition. He said there must have been laxity somewhere when the paving on George and Charlotte Streets was put down. He was in favor of the bathing beaches being open on Sunday, and thought that those who were able to leave the city should not rob the less fortunate ones of their privileges. If Peterboro aims to be an industrial centre it should have proper facilities for education, he continued. "I am against spending one dollar for an increase to the Collegiate Institute, but I do believe that vocational training would be of a great advantage. If an extension were made it should be along those lines. I am in favor of no expenditure which would increase the burden of the taxpayer.

F. R. J. MacPherson.

Mr. MacPherson said that with a couple of Scotchmen like Mr. MacDonald and himself on the Council, the administration would, at least, be economical. The time was not ripe for a school extension, he said, and he had taken his view from people whom he had canvassed. He thought that it was not advisable to submit the matter to the people, as they might give it a black eye. Mr. MacPherson said that he favored improved bathing beach facilities, but did not care about daylight saving. The wish of the people would be his in that regard, he stated.

Mrs. Kate Morris.

Although Mrs. Morris expressed sympathy for the property owners, she did not think that they, representing only 38 per cent. of the municipal vote, should have power to turn down the proposition, especially when the City Council was elected by the entire electorate. She stressed the fact that some land owners were empowered to vote as many as five times on the question, depending on the amount and location of the property. Even when the matter was turned down that did not end it for the Board of Education, for the members still had the problem on their hands. She said the parents and children should be given due consideration. The Board had been criticized for bringing forward an elaborate program, but it was sponsored by the Department of Education, and would draw a grant which would not be available for any other type of school. Mrs. Morris declared that the plan did not call for an elaborate building, but one which would duplicate, externally, the Collegiate Institute, which was of a simple, if not plain, construction. The price, which she declared covered the entire construction cost, together with full equipment and alteration of the old building, would place less than 4-5 of a mill on the taxation. "If the City Council cannot grant that, then I am not free to believe that Peterboro is in the advantageous position claimed for it by Mr. Phelan."

Dr. J. J. Craig.

Dr. Craig said that he had been on the Board of Education two years and was conversant enough with the need for increased accommodation that he was prepared to stand or fall by the issue. Many were still ignorant of the true facts of the situation, he declared, although the papers had treated the matter exhaustively. In an effort to continue with the old building, the Council had allowed makeshifts to take the place of essentials. If a party were to go on a tour of inspection through the commercial building, he declared they would have to tie themselves together along a rope or everyone would not get out. He said it required 96 tons of coal to heat the building for one year. According to his view, Dr. Craig thought it a good idea to increase capital expenditure if the overhead might be reduced.

In addition to that, many students refused to go there because of the odium which would be attached to a scholar there. Students are cut off from the collegiate life, and work at a disadvantage in cramped quarters.

Mrs. Stevenson thanked those who had attended, and regretted that so few were apparently interested in municipal matters.

TO MOVE REPLY.

J. C. Elliott, K.C., Liberal member-elect for West Middlesex, will move the reply to the speech from the throne in parliament next week.

KEMAL SAYS ARMY MUST BE PREPARED

Essential To Study Means of Defence—Troops Are Moving.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—A despatch to the Daily Mail from Constantinople says the new Turkish Supreme Army Council was inaugurated Monday by President Mustapha Kemal Pasha. Mustapha declared it was essential to prepare for the defense of the country and to study ways for increasing the army's fighting value.

Telegraphing from Bagdad, the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph says there is a considerable movement of Turkish troops on the Mosul frontier. He adds that it is further reported that a Turkish division has arrived at Diarbekr in Kurdistan, about 200 miles northwest of Mosul.

The Turkish War Council went into secret session at Angora to devise plans in conformity with the new Russo-Turkish Treaty and regarding the decision of the Council of the League of Nations putting the Mosul region of Irak under British mandate.

General Djevad Pasha, former military commander of Constantinople, who organized the Turkish forces on the Mosul front, participated in the Council.

DAIRY FIRM TO BUY NEW BOILER

Ten Tenders For Wood Were Also Let at Recent Meeting.

EAST EMILY CREAMERY.

EAST EMILY, Dec. 31.—On Wednesday evening, Dec. 23, a heat and power committee meeting was held at East Emily Creamery. The main items on the list were examining the tenders for wood for the season of 1926 and the selection and purchase of a larger and more efficient boiler for the future requirements of the creamery.

After comparing prices and quality embodied in the wood tenders, the question was finally disposed of by awarding the contract to Messrs. Wellington Lowes and Loyd Boate.

In the matter of furnishing more energy in the power-house, the President, Mr. Eugene Switzer, was the recipient of a sheaf of applications for this position. On examining these tenders, they were found to be chiefly descriptive of "used" or "rebuilt" stock, and in the majority of cases, price and quality considered, verged very closely on the new and more up-to-date and modernly equipped machines.

The De Laval representatives, in the persons of Messrs. Hughes and Stacey, were on the scene and helped to dispell the chilly atmosphere by enlarging on the merits and advantages to be gained by installing a new and improved machine such as those handled by their employers.

The members of the Board of Management and Advisory Committee finally concluded that the best was none too good for East Emily Creamery

Mr. Stacey furnished the order forms and the blanks were filled in for a new improved 20 h.p. boiler, complete with the fittings, manufactured by the Leonord Manufacturing Co. of London, Ont.

This is a firm of over thirty years' establishment and needs no introduction to the buying public, and the Creamery Board are to be complimented on their wisdom and choice.

The strongest cloth, and boiler too, that men can make wears out when years are past. The present boiler formerly installed at East Emily cheese factory has had its day, and of late years the need of additional power has been surely felt, and now its coming.

CONSIDER ATTITUDE.

OTTAWA, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—Arrangements are being made for the contemplated caucus of the members of the "Ginger Group," tentatively scheduled to take place on January 5, two days before Parliament assembles. Matters respecting the attitude to be pursued by this group in the next Parliament, involving the question as to which side of the Chamber they will elect to sit, are expected to come before the meeting for consideration.

In the meantime the seating arrangements have been made for the other parties in the Chamber. The Progressives have chosen to sit on the Government side. Members of the "Ginger Group" may decide to sit on the Opposition side, it is believed.

Bethany Residents Recall First Train Through Village

BETHANY, Dec. 31.—There is talk about the C.N.R. withdrawing the mixed train which passes through this village from Lindsay to Port Hope. This is the old road of the Grand Trunk formerly from Midland to Port Hope and several of the oldest residents remember the first train that ever passed over the line and the free ride offered to all by the railroad company. Many of the inhabitants were afraid to trust themselves behind the steaming creature, but bolder ones went and came home with wonderful tales of their trip. At that time this village consisted of a few log shacks in the clearing, chiefly occupied by the construction gang and their families and a few pioneers.

WEDDING BELLS.

BABCOCK—MORTON

The Border Cities Star of Windsor carries the following account of the wedding recently of G. H. Babcock, a former resident of this city:

The marriage of Elizabeth Mary (Betty) Morton of Brantford, daughter of Mrs. W. Morton-Wood, Lockport, N. Y., to Mr. George Hamilton Babcock, only son of Mrs. M. G. Babcock and the late G. N. POSSIBLE BRIDE FOR PRINCE

The announcement that Princess Astrid, niece of the King of Sweden, and one of the prettiest younger members of European royalty, is to be a guest of the King and Queen as soon as the period of court mourning ends, has set British society again speculating as to whether a possible bride has been found for the Prince of Wales. Princess Astrid, who is twenty years of age, is well versed in domestic science, as one of the two studies of her shown above attests.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

SHE DESCRIBES A HOLIDAY BRIDAL GOWN

The usual holiday rush has been upon us, for many people come in between Christmas and New Year's for frocks they find they must have in a hurry because of all the holiday activities.

To add to this, Madame has been designing the entire outfit for a holiday bride. Such excitement as we have had!

The pretty young bride-to-be comes in daily for fittings, and she has ordered such a lot of things.

"I'll make lots of the party frocks and other gowns first," Madame had explained to her. "I like to do this, as it gives me longer to work on the wedding gown."

So the wedding gown was left until almost last, though the design for it had been discussed and the material ordered long before.

The bride was to have ivory brocade and ivory satin, and her one request was that the dress be as simple and graceful as possible.

"That's just the kind of bridal gown I love to make!" Madame assured her. And they put their heads together and began to discuss various plans.

I was present at many of the fittings, and the dress was literally made on the bride, for Madame wanted it to fit perfectly.

"I have never felt as slim as I do in this!" the proud bride-to-be declared.

The ivory brocaded bodice did fit like a glove—like the smart gloves that wrinkle just a trifle in the proper places.

Madame was busy on the ivory satin skirt that was gathered to the bodice, which sloped down over one hip and trailed away in a slender pointed train at the other side.

Just then someone else brought in the filmy silk net veil, which was fitted so that it wrinkled over the hair and was held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms.

The veil was arranged so that it was fairly short in the back, just escaping the floor at the longer parts.

"The smartest new bridal veils are shorter than they used to be," Madame explained. "Some of them come just below the waistline of the bridal gown."

CHRISTMAS CONCERTS

AT GOSPEL HALL.

In the Gospel Hall last evening, a very successful and well-attended Christmas tree party was held, with an excellent programme provided by the Sunday school, and including a very beautiful selection by a ladies' quartette, composed of Mrs. Hartshorn and the Misses Mulligan, Lloyd and Wells, recitations by May Bull, Willie Penny and Charles Norton, and a clever poetical reading from the 53rd Chapter of Isaiah by Winnie Norton, a vocal duet by Kathleen Middleton and Amy Bull, and a motion song, "The Railroad Express," by the Infant Class, Mr. D. Hayward acted as chairman.

At the conclusion of the programme, gifts from the tree were distributed, also a case of oranges, one to each person.

ST. LUKE'S SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A crowded hall greeted the children of St. Luke's Sunday school on the occasion of their concert and presentation of prizes in the Parish Hall. Mayor J. J. Turner and E. A. Peck were the judges for the different events and decided that in view of the exceptional merit of the performanee of the children that they would donate a prize to everyone who took part. The main performer was Kelly the Ventriloquist who, with his three talking dolls, made a decided hit with the children, while his whistling, singing and readings were a source of considerable entertainment to the grown-ups who were present. The remainder of the programme was taken up with piano solos and dialogues rendered by the scholars, after which Mayor J. J. Turner presented the prizes to the successful pupils. The manner in which the various scholars enacted their various parts reflected great credit on the training of the teachers concerned as the whole programme went through without a single hitch.

ST. JOHN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL.

St. John's Sunday School Hall was prettily decorated with flags, bunting, and Christmas candles for the supper and concert given the children of the school last evening at 6.30 o'clock. Places were set and abundance of delicious refreshments furnished for about two hundred children. This is a new departure for the Christmas entertainment, but it was greatly enjoyed and appreciated. The provision committee consisted of Mrs. W. Deyman as convenor, Miss S. A. Tompkins, Miss May Waddingham, Mrs. and Winnie Long, Miss Mary Comstock and others of the staff of the Sunday School who helped with the work. After the supper a concert was given by the children and others under the chairmanship of Mr. E. Sorby.

Rev. Dr. Blagrave opened the proceedings with a short address.

The programme was as follows:

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 30.—On Christmas afternoon the G. W. V. A. held its annual Christmas tree for the children of the veterans in the Memorial Hall with a fair attendance. Christmas Day is, of course, the day for the family but if it is so for the individual it is, in an even greater degree, a day for the community when the great family gathers in the village hall to exchange the season's greetings and see the future ratepayers receive their gifts from Santa.

Among those present were the Reeve and Mrs. Strickland and Councillors E. A. Tanner and W. Madill, representing the village, Rev. J. J. Garvey, Rev. W. H. Howard and Rev. W. Cox, representing the clergy of the village, and Mrs. W. M. Graham, representing the School Board. There were also a number of citizens present and of course a crowd of kiddies, and representatives of the G. W. V. A. and the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Mr. T. W. B. Marling, president of the local branch of the G. W. V. A., acted as chairman and welcomed those present in a graceful speech. "Christmas," said the speaker, "is especially for the kiddies and Santa Claus is on his way and we hope he will be recognized and given a hearty welcome."

Billy McFadden, one of the youngest little folks present, was sent out to welcome Santa and bring him in, and with the ringing of sleighbells Santa entered the room, led proudly in by Billy. Santa carried a well-filled pack and in every way lived up to his reputation and all the traditions which children of all ages have endowed him.

Billy McFadden said a recitation about Santa Claus and what he means to young Canada and the genial saint presented gifts to the following children: Pat McFadden, Westhall Adamson, Sherman Hill, George Chappell, Alice Pringle, Bernice Edwards, Constance Stuart, Kathleen Lawless, Jean Orr, Merle Webster, Lillian Pringle, Dorothy Montgomery, June Burrows, Ivan Tighe, Elwood Rowe, Carson Webster, Alice Chappell, Nora Webster, Billy Adamson, Jean Clarke, Garnet O'Neil, Betty Lampman, Francis Edwards, Denise Hill, Freida Webster, Leslie Edwards, Douglas Holmes, Barbara Grier, Eva Edwards, Katherine Lampman, Rob Stenner, Alma Pringle, Tom Chappell, Donald Holmes, Claude Sheiven, Baby Graham, Thelma Edwards, Harding Stuart, George Stenner, Baby Hill, Constance Orr, Stanley Edwards, B. Chad, — Northey, Jack Chappell, Gordon Shewen, Gordon Hill, Jack Rose, Bernard McFadden, Elsie Tighe, Marion Twist, Baby Tighe, Roydon Ellsworth, Daisy Edwards, Billy Clarke, — Montgomery, Elsie Chappell, Paddy Lampman, Baby Hurl, Hugh Ogilvie, Elma Tighe, Elizgeth. Twist, Bernard Burrows, Nellie Stenner, Freddy Hudson, Veronica McFadden, Nora Webster, Ducie Chad, Jerome McFadden, Violet Hudson, — O'Neil; Messrs. A. Webster and B. Summers assisted Mr. Marling in stripping the tree of the gifts which were presented by Santa Claus, who gave each person in the hall a bag of nuts and candy.

A short programme was rendered, with a solo by Mrs. Burrows, a dance by Margaret Lawless, a piano solo by Herrick Brown and a recitation by Kathleen Lawless.

The afternoon's programme was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem, Mrs. H. E. Moore playing the accompaniment.

The afternoon was delightful and it is the purpose of the veterans to make this an annual event.

CAVAN, December 31. — The annual Christmas tree and entertainment of Cavan Sunday school, was held in the Community Hall on Christmas eve.

Miss Tinney and Mr. Totten sang solos which were much enjoyed.

Messrs. Reg. Sutton and Will Swain took the two principal parts, while little folks represented characters in Mother Goose rhymes. They succeeded in changing Old Growler's views concerning Christmas.

Mr. Will White contributed a good reading entitled "Whispering Bill."

Santa Claus distributed the presents from the well laden tree. A good time was enjoyed by all.

OMEMEE L.O.L.

OMEMEE, Dec 30.—The annual Christmas night entertainment, put on under the auspices of L.O.L. 113, has passed into history and the local young people of the United Church have added one more triumph to their score.

The play, "Deacon Dubbs," was full of action from start to finish and kept the large audience in roars of laughter from the rise of the curtain until the final drop.

The heroine of the play, Rose Raleigh, the village school teacher, around whom twines the story of the play was excellently played by Miss Violet McBain. "Rose," after an absence of two years in the city, is teaching again in the village school. Her old home is about to be sold as a foreclosure on a mortgage. The hero of the play, Amos Coleman, a struggling young lawyer, would like to buy the place for his sweetheart, Rose, but lack of funds prevents him. In the meantime, Rawdon Crawley (the villain), and former husband of Rose, whom she believes dead, appears in the interests of the Empire State Trust Company, and having discovered iron ore on the farm, is determined to buy it at any price. The auctioneer, Major Moses McNutt, arrives from the city and discovers in Rose Raleigh, the owner of the property, the wife of Rawden Crawley. When assured that Crawley is dead he becomes a firm friend of the little school teacher. An unexpected arrival in the person of old Deacon Dubbs from West Virginia, uncle of Amos Coleman, relives the situation by buying in the property and turning it back to Rose.

Rawden Crawley is finally killed by a train and Rose is enabled to marry the man she loves.

Much merriment was created during the evening by Yennie Yensen, the Swedish maid, who, with her "saxteen dollars and saxty-nine cents," is determined to buy Deuteronomy Jones, the hired man. "Deut." finally lands in the net and all is happiness.

The housekeeper, Miss Philipena Popover (of uncertain age), discovers in the deacon a childhood sweetheart, and their renewed courtship is constantly interrupted by the Deacon's naughty niece, Trixie Coleman. The characters were wonderfully well taken and should the play be repeated as requested, no doubt, a full house will again greet the talented young people.

The cast of characters was as follows:

Deacon Dubbs, L. A. Mahood.
Amos Coleman, R. Brooks.
Trixie Coleman, Katie Weir.
Emily Dale, Muriel McGinness.
Rose Raleigh, Violet McBain.
Philipena Popover, Mary Faulkner.
Yennie Yensen, Marion Rea.
Rawdon Crawley, E. Corneil.
Deuteronomy Jones, Ted Marsh.
Major Moses McNutt, Gordon Bradley.
Children, Francis McPherson, Evelyn Morcombe.
Villagers, Mary Lowe, Lillian Race, Rita Kennedy, Cecil Kennedy and R. Thurston.

WARSAW UNITED CHURCH.

WARSAW, Dec. 30. — The United Church Sunday School held its annual Christmas tree on Christmas night. The receipts were over thirty dollars. Rev. H. B. Herrington was chairman. The program consisted of "Welcome by Albert Selkirk"; recitations by Erma Darling, Margaret Selkirk, Mrs. P. Lloyd, "The Widder Green," Lucile Herrington, Sidney McCauley and Archie Crowe; a banner recitation and song, four girls; scarf drill, eight girls; choruses by school, "Ring the Bells of Christmas," and "His Coming Brings Joy"; solo, "Jerusalem, Mr. Henry Batten; cantata, "Santa Claus and Co., thirty-two children; and distributing gifts by Santa Claus.

During the evening, Mr. Somers, superintendent of Sunday School, was presented with a teacher's Bible. Mrs. Robert Moore presented the Bible, and Mrs. John Sargent read the address:

Dear Mr. Somers:—The members of Warsaw United Sunday School wish to show you, in some slight way, their appreciation of your devotion to the Sunday School. Though you have a long distance to come, and the road is none of the best, you are always on hand. We feel that it is love for the Master, lover of men, and a desire to help your fellow-man, that leads you to do it. It often means a considerable sacrifice on your part, and we know it is your noble, Christian spirit that impels you.

Perhaps the name, Robert Neill, which your parents gave you, in honor of a noble pioneer minister, may have influenced you.

Will you please accept this Bible, not that a new one will ever take the place of the old one, of which you know every page, but perhaps you might like to carry it, and may our Heavenly Father long spare you to be an example to the followers of Christ.

There was also a presentation to Mrs. George Taylor, for many years church organist, Mrs. Sargent presented a handsome cut-glass sherbet set and tray and Mrs. James Hawthorne read the address:

Dear Mrs. Taylor:—The members of the United Church congregation feel that this Christmas season should not pass without letting you know we do appreciate your services. We know your life is bound up in this church and especially in the music. You have ever been faithful, and often against great odds.

Will you please accept this sherbet set as a slight token of our appreciation, and we hope that you will long feel able to continue your work.

The intense cold on Sunday thinned the congregations. The Anglican church decorated. Rev. Walter Cox preached a Christmas sermon, in his usual telling way, and officiated at the Christmas Communion.

ONCE UPON A TIME — RIP VAN WINKLE—XIV (WASHINGTON IRVING) — by W. J. ENRIGHT.

THE ORACLE

This day we fashion Destiny, our web of Fate we spin. —Whittier.

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute. —Milton.

Life is a complicated affair at best, but it is especially difficult on this day, when memories of failures crowd upon us in the closing hours of a year, and our sub-conscious selves urge the need of improvement in the year that opens to-morrow.

These qualms of conscience or this sense of falling short of ideals is a good thing, if treated properly. Discouragement should not be allowed to prevail, but we should carefully analyse the mistakes we have made to find the source of error and correct it. If memories of shortcomings spur us to greater effort and more care in 1926, then we are living as we should; the man who is satisfied to-day is dead from the neck up.

There are two principal sources of error I have found from long experience with men, and they are both, fortunately, susceptible to a determined attack. They are, briefly, lack of initiative and lack of base.

It is surprising how many men are groping their ways through life in uncongenial work, though fitted for positions much better; how many men are filling subordinate posts when they should, by their ability, be in executive positions; and how many women are satisfied to be housewives and think that because they have the care of families they must abstain from pursuits for which they are highly adapted. And all for lack of initiative.

Less common, but numerous too, are the cases where men are full of vim and push, and actually get into responsible positions, without the mental base or basic training to efficiently administer the job entrusted to them.

If you are among the live ones who seek to elevate themselves and are determined not to let 1926 pass without bettering their positions, read on. If you are satisfied with yourself as you are, and have no spark of ambition, turn over and return to dreamland. This is not for you.

You active, aspiring ones, take paper and pencil and figure out your present worth and the mental capital you have available for investment in 1926. I will give you the outline, and leave you to carry out the detail work according to your own valuation. Take an hour to-night, or two if necessary, to find just where you stand on the ladder of success; you may be nearer the top than you thought, requiring only a few more steps, or you may learn in time that only a few rungs have been climbed. You may find that you are taking the wrong ladder to reach the pinnacle to which you aspire. Whatever you learn, your investment of time will be adequately repaid, for the first requisite to success is to know yourself.

CHART YOURSELF.

Your physical, mental and moral development is to be represented in your chart by seven degrees, and each division will be charted separately. The degrees are: 7—very large; 6—large; 5—full; 4—average; 3—moderate; 2—small; 1—very small. These numbers are to be applied by you according to your valuation of yourself, honestly given, on each organ according to the tabulation that will be given later. By completing the chart, and studying it in its entirety and the different sections in their relations to one another, you will have a wonderfully informative guide to your abilities, adaptabilities, and failures.

PHYSIOLOGICAL CONDITION.

Organic Quality: Are you fine-grained, pure-minded, refined and sensitive, with lofty aspirations and tender sympathies? Are you greatly affected by extremes of heat and cold? Do you live in the unreal rather than the real world? Check yourself 7.

Are you fine-grained, susceptible, sensitive, refined in your tastes, pleasures and aspirations; full of human nature, and true to its intuitions and instincts? Do you possess great clearness of mind? Check yourself 6.

Are you rather impressible and sympathetic in thought and feeling, but less liable to extremes of feeling and emotion than in the above? Check yourself 5.

Are you plain in your tastes, more given to labor than to study, practical in your views, not very poetical or sentimental? Check yourself 4.

Are you coarse grained in sentiment, and both vulgar and non-intellectual; uncouth in mind, unfit for study, and only qualified for manual labor? Check yourself 2.

Are you dotish? Check yourself 1.

SAME PLAN THROUGHOUT.

This is the plan to follow through out. Space will not permit the giving of all the many sections in full, but an average is easily struck. Be careful not to over-estimate yourself, but do not err on the other side. Be fair to yourself, and be honest.

SUMMING UP.

And now, having traversed the whole gamut of your physical, mental and moral personality, what a wealth of information you have ready at hand — if you have been honest and sincere. Think of the requirements of your present job. Do they fit with the qualifications you have, and the traits you manifest? And if they do, are you using all your powers, or just enough to see you through? Are the others dormant? Or dying?

Are you getting the most out of life? If not, is it because you are deficient in agreeableness, hopefulness, or kindliness?

Is one side of your nature developed or over-developed, while another remains almost untouched? Why not balance up?

At the end of 1926 what will the record be? You cannot stand still in any one of the departments you have investigated. You must either go forward or back. Think that over. Nineteen twenty-six will have a tale to tell of you. Make it a worthy story.

And I wish you all, who have become friends through these columns, the happiness that comes through the living of life to its fullest possibilities; and the deep, deep satisfaction that is known only to those who have faced issues squarely and conquered them by indomitable courage.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

LAZY ANT SEES MISTAKE

Once there lived, in an anthill, down by the side of the road, a wee little ant with his mother and hundreds of brothers and sisters. He was quite a pretty little brown ant, but very, very lazy. All he did from morning until night, after he had visited the nearest honey well for his breakfast, was to sit around in an old tin can, sleeping or admiring his pretty shiny brown coat.

One day it happened that a queer little ant passed by Lazy Ant's house. The traveler's suit was covered with dust and to his leg was clinging yellow stuff. He stopped by Lazy Ant's house and asked for a sip of honey.

"I've come a long way and I'm hungry and thirsty," he said.

"Then stop at the next inn and buy yourself something to eat and drink," snapped Lazy Ant rudely. "We're not putting up food and drink for you 'Farmer Ants'."

"All right," answered the stranger wearily. "I may be a Farmer Ant but I have yet the first time to refuse a helping hand to another." Then away he trotted down the road.

Now it happened the next day, while Lazy Ant was out running through the meadows idling away his time, he discovered a queer hole in the ground. Instead of being raised, like the ant-hill in which he lived, Lazy Ant discovered that this house sloped down to the center. His curiosity got the better of him, and down he crawled to investigate.

There's no telling what might have happened if the very same Farmer Ant that he had made fun of the day before had not stuck his head over the top of the hole and called him.

"Here, take my hand," he cried. Then with a quick jerk, he grabbed Lazy Ant out of the hole and hurried behind a blade of grass.

From the center of the hole the dirt began to fly at a great rate and out came an Ant Lion.

When Lazy Ant spied him, he caught hold of Farmer Ant's hand and they ran.

They soon came to a place where the ground was all cleared for a circle as large as the pond near Lazy Ant's house. Here Farmer Ant stopped and pointed to the one plant that was allowed to grow in the bare spot of ground.

"I'm a Farmer Ant and this is my farm," he said proudly. "Why don't you come and live with me and help me do my work. I'm sure you would love it and you wouldn't be getting into mischief as you did just now. That Lion Ant would have eaten you, if I hadn't pulled you out of his hole. When this ant rice is dry, we gather it and store it away for Winter. You can help tend the crop, help keep the ground clean and help gather and eat the rice."

Lazy Ant's eyes widened as he looked over the large farm. This was the ant he had refused a sip of honey. He was ashamed and right then and there he agreed to stay and help Farmer Ant, if he would have patience with him.

This pleased Farmer Ant and he set Lazy Ant to work that very day. If you should happen to pass that part of the meadow and see a little brown ant busy among the ant rice, you can be sure that it is our old friend Lazy Ant. He never tired of working for Farmer Ant and he has learned to love his labor.

MINOR C. KEITH—OF COSTA RICA FAME.

One American, at least, stands high in half a dozen Central American republics. The same country that repudiated and shot Walker, the "gray-eyed man of destiny," today looks upon Minor C. Keith as a demigod.

The man who was to become the greatest single force in developing Central America was born in Brooklyn and started life as a clerk in New York at $3 a week. But he had sense enough to know that he was born for bigger things and at seventeen years old became a lumber surveyor. Within a year he had saved $3,000 and went into the lumber business himself.

We next see him—not yet old enough to vote—raising cattle and hogs on a lonely island near the mouth of the Rio Grande. Only one other family lived on the island. He had a herd of 4,000 head of cattle and a out 2 00 ho whe n 1871, th re came a letter which was destined to change his career —and shape Central Americ n h'stor

An uncle, Henry Meiggs, the famous builder of the first railway over the ndes, and his brothers, ngaged In railroading in South America. They urged young Keith to join them. And he did.

A brother who was constructing a railway in Costa Rica died. Keith courageously undertook to complete that line though it led through bogs, dense jungles infested with reptiles, scorpions and mosquitoes.

"The man who makes that journey once is a hero," said the Costa Ricans, "but the man who makes it twice is a fool." They refused to work. Keith brought 700 laborers from New Orleans. But one by one they succumbed to the dread fever; only twenty-five survived. He then brought 2,000 into the company at a valuation of $4,000,000.

The United Fruit Company then spent over $200,000,000 in redeeming the tropical wilderness, building railways and tramways, a wireless station which has welded together every republic and island in the tropics, built lighthouses, erected modern hospitals and fought fever.

Keith's concern is the biggest farm in the world with its 1,200,000 acres, which is also stocked with thousands of cattle, horses and mules.

Minor C. Keith was not afraid to leave the beaten track and break new trails for himself. Today he sits in his New York office directing huge plantations in Central and South America, and a fleet of ninety steamships, half of which his company owns outright. Through efficient managers he directs more than 60,000 employees, who say among themselves:

"Mistah Keith is de greatest man ever live. De poor know dat."

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

Some scientist has figured that the sun gives out as much heat to us in a year as would the burning of sixty earths if they were composed entirely of anthracite coal. That is amazing, isn't it?

But have you thought of what else the sun does? It is not confined in its kindly effect to the production of heat alone. It has an effect upon life. The sun's rays include rays which have vital, stimulating, growing qualities. More and more their importance is becoming recognized.

"Specialists at the London Hospital are using solar rays to work the rejuvenation of a baby boy, who upon birth two years ago, had every appearance of advanced age, and who until a few weeks ago had never aroused from a deep slumber.

"Baby 'Rip Van Winkle,' as he was dubbed by the medical men, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cohen, of Highgate. His mother said he never cried, but lay motionless for a year, life being sustained by artificial feeding.

"'His body was stone cold, even in Summer,' she said. "He was just like an old, old man.'

"Doctors at first considered the case hopeless, but at a conference of twenty-four specialists several weeks ago it was determined to make a final effort to save the baby's life by the use of solar rays. His milk diet also was changed to one of fruit juices.

"The other day, to the astonishment of the hospital attendants, the baby began to cry and then to fuss and squirm like an ordinary infant. He has now progressed further and is growing teeth. The specialists believe that within two years he will be a normal child."

This sounds a lot like old-fashioned quack medicine advertising, but it is the recital of a story very familiar now to specialists in children's diseases. It really is remarkable what cures are effected by the use of the sun's rays.

You will observe in this despatch that fruit juices as well as sunlight were administered. In other words, the baby was given a diet of vitamines and the sunlight which may well be the source of all vitamines.

There is in Nature a mysterious something which we call vitamines. It is a force, an energy, a stimulus capable of providing growth and promoting well-being. Hess and other investigators in Americac have demonstrated what sunlight will do in aiding underformed children. This despatch from London gives emphasis to what all wise doctors are preaching.

Give your baby lots of sunlight. In the Winter find a sunny corner in a warm room and let him sprawl naked on a clean blanket. It will do more than medicine.

PARALYSIS CURE MAY BE FOUND

MENDS SPINAL CORD.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—The probability that a cure for paralysis may be found was seen yesterday in experiments described by Dr. R. W. Gerard, University of Chicago, at the closing session of the Convention of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

Dr. Gerard explained how cords severed in operations on embryo rats in gestation had mended, the rats were born normal, and were healthy through long lives.

Incurable paralysis invariably develops in humans after the spinal cord has been severed, Dr. Gerard said. He has hopes that the human spinal cord may be mended, possibly by patches.

Seekers Of Aid In Whitby To Be Asked To Break Stone

COBOURG, Dec. 31.—With the idea of formulating a plan of dual interest to the municipality and to those who apply for help, the Whitby Town Council at its closing 1925 session, passed a resolution recommending to the council of 1926 that steps be taken to procure hammers and a supply of stone to be broken by men applying for relief, the material thus procured to be used for repair of the streets. It was stated that some of the side streets were in need of repair and it was contended the plan would be of mutual benefit to the municipality and to those applying for aid.

Other British Firms Have Come Through Period of Depression.

LONDON, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press).—The year 1925 has been a period of depression for coal, shipping, iron, and steel industrials and of prosperity for artificial silk, motors, rubber, and electrical industries, says the American Chamber of Commerce summary for British trade for December.

The November overseas trade, as compared with November, 1924, showed a shrinkage in both imports and exports. Another prosperous field is the leather market, which is very active, while manufacturers of women's Russian boots are working overtime.

There has been a large volume of new flotations. The index number of wholesale prices fell to 153.7 in November, against 169.8 in November, 1924.

ARTICLE No. 23

The hands analyzed in this article are certainly puzzlers. The writer has submitted them to three well-known experts and none of them agreed on any one of the hands. It is this very difference of opinion, however, that makes auction so fascinating. You will probably all make up your minds what you would do with each hand so that if you differ from the writer, think of the three experts and their differences of opinion. Auction always will be interesting because the personal element always will be dominant. It is wise to conform to conventions, but on close hands conventions are of little value and the personal opinion always will rule.

Hand No. 1

Hearts — A, K, J, 9, 7, 3
Clubs — 10, 9, 8, 4
Diamonds — A, 9, 4
Spades — none

Y / A B / Z

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade, A bid two hearts. Y two spades, B three hearts and Z four spades. How should A read the bidding and what is his proper bid? It should be apparent that Z considers that he has a game hand. His unnecessarily high bid of four spades over three hearts is a good indicator of his opinion. A is then placed in a position where it is practically certain that Z has a game in spades and must decide how much he is willing to sacrifice to save that game. In the actual hand A bid five hearts, was doubled by Y and lost 200 points. Z had a very unusual hand containing eight spades and five diamonds. He could have just made four spades so A's sacrifice of 200 points to save game and rubber was justifiable.

Hand No. 2

Y / A B / Z

Hearts — J, 6
Clubs — A, K, 9, 8, 7, 5, 3
Diamonds — 8, 3, 2
Spades — 6

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one club, A doubled, Y passed, and B bid one spade. Z passed, A bid two hearts, Y two no-trump, B and Z passed. A bid three hearts, Y doubled and B passed. What should be Z's analysis of the bidding and what should be his proper bid? This is a very close hand. The fact that Z's club suit is of seven cards makes it unlikely that it will win more than one trick at the most. His partner, Y, in doubling, must be depending on Z for two tricks because of his original club bid. He hasn't got those two tricks for his clubs will be trumped, either the first or second round, so he should bid four clubs over Y's double of three hearts. In the actual hand Z passed and A made four odd. Z's clubs were trumped on the first round, just as he should have expected. When you have led your partner to believe by an original bid that you can take two tricks, either be in a position to do so or to go on with your bid.

Hand No. 3

Hearts — K, Q, 8, 4
Clubs — 8, 4, 3
Diamonds — Q, 9, 8, 3
Spades — A, 3

Y / A B / Z

Hearts — J, 6
Clubs — K, Q, 7
Diamonds — K, J, 10, 7, 2
Spades — Q, 9, 7

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no-trump, A and Y passed and B bid two clubs. Z bid two no-trump and all passed. A opened the nine of clubs, Y played the trey, B the ace and Z the seven. B then returned the jack of clubs, Z played the queen, A the deuce and Y the four. Z now played a low diamond, A played the ace, Y the trey and B the four. A then led the four of spades. How should Z analyze the hand and what is his proper play? Z has the choice of two plays, either to win the trick with ace of spades and set up his heart suit or to pass the spade trick, hoping that A has the king. To the writer, the former play seems the better. B is marked with the ace of hearts; otherwise his bid of two clubs would have been unsound. If he also has the king of spades, Z cannot make game for B will set up his clubs before he loses his ace of hearts. Z should play the ace of spades, therefore, and then lead a low heart from Y's hand and then play the jack from his hand. If B refuses to take this trick Z should return the six of hearts. B will surely win this trick and if he plays the club, Z will now make game. It is a close hand and hard to say what Z should play. In the actual hand, B held both the king of spades and ace of hearts so that the only way to score game was to play the ace of spades at trick four.

Peterboro and Kitchener Battle 30 Mins. Overtime in 5-5 Tie

BAILEY EVENED SCORE IN KITCHENER BEFORE FINAL GONG, CLOSING FIGHTING RALLY BY PETERBORO IN LAST PERIOD AFTER TRAILING THE DUTCHMEN 4 TO 1

Both Teams Played Safe Defensive Game in Three Overtime Sessions—Petes Started Badly in Early Stages of Opening Game.

TURNED ROUT INTO A MORAL VICTORY COX STARTED THE EQUALIZING RALLY

(By F. D. C.)

KITCHENER, Dec. 30.—A fighting third period rally by the Petes, after they were apparently badly beaten and were down 5 goals to 2 with only twelve minutes left to play, saved—although it did not win—last night's game here, and the opening O.H.A. fixture eventually wound up in a 5 to 5 tie, after the teams had battled 30 minutes overtime without being able to break the deadlock.

It was a close call and only a sparkling play by Irvin Bailey as the timers were reaching for the gong, with Kitchener leading 5 to 4 in the last period, enabled the Petes to get an even break on the night. With a few seconds to go Bailey broke away at centre, went down the left boards into the corner, momentarily lost the puck when Karges threw his stick at the rubber, picked it up again, circled the net and caught Klem, the Kitchener defence, flat-footed, to slip in the tieing goal.

The Petes were all at sea in the early stages. Kitchener, close checking, had them baffled. The clever stick-handling of Karges and Roth and neat work by Hiller gave them a world of trouble, and until they stages their game onslaught half way through the last period it looked as if Capt. Bailey's crew were doomed to defeat.

Kitchener led 2 to 0 at the end of the first period, 4 to 1 at the close of the second, and although the Petes got the first goal in the last session, the Westerners retaliated with another, and with the period half over looked to have a safe lead.

Fighting Spirit Flares.

Then the Peterboro crew, fighting desperately like the game outfit they are, cut loose with a rally that just in the nick of time turned a rout into a moral victory. It was a sudden onslaught that snatched away the laurel just when it appeared as if nothing could prevent a Kitchener win, and it proved that the Petes have the fighting spirit that all teams with championship aspirations must possess. Their off-color exhibition at the early part of the game was forgotten in the thrill of the gallant fight against odds in the dying moments of the last period.

The overtime periods saw some exciting hockey but both teams were cautious. They took no chances at leaving their defence areas unprotected by any less than a three-man rearguard, and in the second and third overtime periods, the attacks were mainly of a one-man nature, with both outfits trying to drive home the winning counter on shots from outside the defence.

Early in the game nobody worked right for the Petes. Dwyer was beaten by a couple of shots he never saw. The forwards were bunching too much and inffective in their checking, and the close-checking of the Kitchener crew had the whole outfit looking bad. When the rally came, however, the Easterners hit their real stride, and they gave the Kitchener fans a brand of hockey that was reminiscent of last year's games.

Bailey and Ranger Good.

On this rally and in the overtime Bailey and Ranger were the most effective of the Petes' attacking forces, although every man in the outfit helped to avert defeat. Bailey's speed seemed to increase as the end of the game drew near, and his fast rushes gave Kitchener all kinds of trouble, and eventually saved the situation. Ranger played his best hockey of the season, was always in his position, and his good shooting from the left boards beat Klem for two nice goals. Cox, the Collingwood youngster, scored a pretty goal by circling the net after a lone-handed rush.

Collins and Rose, like the rest of the outfit, improved as the game went on, and did fine work in the last period and in the extra sessions. The defence pair, Parker and McLeod, had a tough night's work, and were a tower of strength. In the early stages the indifferent checking of the forwards threw a lot of work on the Peterboro defence, and later on McLeod and Parker almost skated themselves out leading rushes down the ice. They were a tired pair when it was all over. Dwyer, after being beaten by a couple he would usually get, tightened up in great style and held Kitchener off the scoring sheet for the last forty-two minutes.

Karges Kitchener's Best.

Karges, veteran defence player, was Kitchener's outstanding star. The old master of stick-handling wiggled his way through for two goals himself and engineered a clever play for another by Hiller, and he was always dangerous. Roth especially in the first period also uncovered some effective stick-handling, but Parker stepped into him with a stiff body check near the end of the period and he was not so effective thereafter. Hiller, both defensively and offensively, was a big help to the Westerners, and Klem made some fine saves in the nets.

It was very much Kitchener in the early part of the first period. The Green Shirts opened out fast, and less than two minutes after the start Karkes made one of his slow-moving rushes and drilled a shot from outside the defence that Dwyer never glimpsed. The teams were five a side at the time, Ranger having been chased for tripping and Hinsperger for dumping Bailey. The Petes had trouble in shaking off the Kitchener checking, although McLeod nearly evened the count after a nice rush, and Klem had to make a great ston to save on a low shot to the corner by Bailey.

Then Bailey drew a penalty for slashing at Klem, who held the puck after making a stop. With the one man advantage Kitchener increased their lead when Roth stick-handled out of the corner and in on top of Dwyer for a neat goal.

The Second Period.

Early in the second period White was given the gate for dumping Bailey, and the Petes got a break. From the face-off the puck came over to Ranger, whose swift shot squeezed between Klem and the post for a goal. The Petes came on fast then, and for the first time worked like themselves. Just, however, when it appeared that they were going to tie it up, Karges broke with Hiller, and the defence player carried the rubber through alone to make it 3 to 1.

McLeod retaliated with a rush, but Klem foiled him, and right after that a smart Collins to Ranger play beat the Kitchener defence cold, but Ranger shot wide.

Finally Hiller, ten feet off, side-picked up a loose puck at centre and went in alone to sail another goal past Dwyer, and Kitchener were 4 to 1 in front, the figures remaining thus until the end of the period.

Cox Starts Rally.

A rush by McLeod and a pass to Ranger was converted into a Peterboro goal less than three minutes after the last period started on Ranger's good shot from the side, and when Hinsperger dumped Bailey and was chased, the Petes looked good for more. Kitchener held them however, and when the sides were even Karges made a neat rush and passed out from the corner to Hiller, who gave Dwyer no chance. That made it 5 to 2 and the period wast drifting on.

Cox started the Peterboro rally when he went down the right boards, skated around the Kitchener net, and slammed the rubber past Klem.

Parker was chased for an accidental trip, but even with a man short the Petes pressed, and after a combined rush by McLeod and Ranger, Bailey pushed the puck into the net, leaving the score 5 to 4 with eight minutes to go.

It was a hectic struggle until the final gong from then on, and as the minutes slipped by and the Petes could not drive home the equalizer, it looked like a Kitchener win. Then came Bailey's beautiful play, and the battle was sewed up with three seconds to go.

Overtime Periods.

The first period of the overtime saw the fastest hockey of the extra sessions. Bailey came near winning the decision when he shot down in a fast rush, hurdled Karges and landed in front of Klem, with the puck, only to have the little Kitchener goaler stick his shoulder into the shot. Roth came back with a fine rush for Kitchener, but shot wide, and then the two best chances to secure a verdict were lost.

The last two ten minutes' overtime periods found both teams tired and cautious, and although there was tremendous excitement until the final gong, the dash of the third regular period was lacking. Dwyer and Klem refused to be beaten by anything drilled at them, and two very tired teams skated off after ninety minutes of strenuous going with honors even.

OTTAWA'S SKILL BEATS PIRATES

Senators Show Why They Are Leading League By Shutout Victory.

AT PITTSBURGH.

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press) — The strong Ottawa sextette, leaders of the National Hockey League clearly demonstrated its superiority over Pittsburgh when it trounced the latter team here last night to the tune of 5 to 0 in a game replete with plenty of action, thrills and bitter fighting.

The Senators showed why they are the class of the league. Their skating, checking and team play were a treat to watch.

Holders of Bonds of Company Cannot Claim Payment in Gold.

PARIS, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—Holders of obligations of the Credit Foncier, Franco-Canadian, have lost their claim against the concern that they be reimbursed in gold frans, in which its 1910 and 1911 loans were contracted. The court ruled that they must accept paper francs in liquidation of obligations.

INSIDE GOLF.

By CHESTER HORTON
Maker of 51 Golf Champions "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

"If the back swing is so fast that the jerk of the clubhead at the top causes the grip to loosen the clubhead will dip downward six to eight inches below the horizontal position. This is bad for the golfer. It takes an unfailing sense of timing to be able to dip the clubhead that way and still hit the ball well. This dip is a small added factor that can cause a lot of trouble in the swing because when the clubhead dips downward that way it must first be brought back before the real forward swing can begin. You perhaps can sense how very difficult this is going to make timing—and it does make it that difficult. Without ability to wait back for such a clubhead, the clubhead will drag behind the hands and always be late at the ball.

Skaters and Curlers Were Out in Force for Opening.

SPECIAL SERVICES

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 31—The rink was opened on Monday night and resumed its old place as a rendezvous for old and young. Skaters were present in crowds, eager to try the ice the first night and the devotees of the roarin' game were present, both ices being occupied by ardent curlers anxious to get into form before the first scheduled games, which will begin this week.

Already the paths to the rink are well worn, showing that its popularity is as great as in former years.

Christmas services were held in the Baptist church and the United churches on Sunday with special music and appropriate sermons.

Christmas services were continued in St. John's Church on Sunday with choral service in the morning and a carol service at night when familiar carols wer rendered by choir and congregation.

The annual Christmas treat for children of the Sunday school will be held in the Town Hall on Thursday afternoon with a holiday dance in the evening, also in the Town Hall.

ST. PATS LOSE IN OVERTIME

FINAL SCORE 2-1.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press)—A green tide that constantly threatened was finally turned back by the New York Americans in their National Hockey League clash with Toronto St. Pats last night, after eight minutes overtime play, when "Shorty" Green netted the puck to break a tie and give Rickard's men a 2 to 1 win over the Irish. The game, full of thrilling close play, was of the kind that kept 8,000 hockey fans in a constant uproar.

TUNNEY LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN FOR TITLE

Won First Bout of Series Calculated to End With Dempsey Bout.

ST PETERSBURG, Fla., Dec. 30 (Canadian Press)—Gene Tunney, leading aspirant for Jack Dempsey's crown, launched a winter's campaign, which he hopes will take him into a title fight with the champion next summer, here, last night, when he stopped Dan O'Dowd, Boston veteran, in the second round. A short right hook to the jaw sent O'Dowd out a minute after the second round had opened.

CANADIENS WON EXCITING GAME

SCORE WAS 7-4.

MONTREAL, Dec. 31 (Canadian Press)—Canadiens uncorked the surprise of the local N.H.L. season when they trimmed the smart Montreal Maroon team here last night 7 to 4 in a game which bristled with action, much of it of the strenuous and unorthodox hockey which occasionally breaks out when the two local teams clash. In the heat of a scoreless deadlock in the first period Joliat rushed and shot. When goal umpire Ernie Russell would not allow him the goal, Joliat attacked Russell with his stick. Russell grabbed the stick but in turn was pinned by the arms of a spectator. At this point, Boucher rushed in and cracked Russell over the fact with his stick. The players intervened but Russell had still the spectator to deal with and he did it in smart manner. Then the police jumped into action and the spectator was arrested.

FLOODS MENACE LARGER CITIES AS RIVERS RISE

Seine Threatens Paris, and Rhine Already Invades Cologne.

RAINS CONTINUE.

PARIS, Dec. 31. — (Canadian Press.)—Warm, heavy rains continue in Northern France, but little actual damage has been done in that territory despite the threatening situation of the past two days. Reports from all places last night said that the swollen condition of the rivers and tributary streams make the outlook disquieting."

The flood appears to be just at its crest; if it continues a little further it will be serious. The Seine must rise three feet yet before Paris itself is menaced, but the suburbs are already feeling the effects of the flood in the streets. Part of Joinville is submerged; Champigny is threatened and the wharves at Asnieres, Le Vallois and St. Denis are under water. Near Beauvais several villages are cut off completely.

Rivers Still Rising.

The Rhone, Saone, Aisne, Marne and Oise are still rising, as well as the Loire and the Cher, but the Yonne and Vienne are lower. Houses have been abandoned, roads cut by the water in the Cher Valley and housetops torn away.

The Seine has reached within a foot and a half of the flood mark of 1910 at Troyes. The Rhone is more than twelve feet above the ordinary level at Avignon.

The Moselle river at Metz is very high and the situation is rather critical, but the Meurthe, near Saint Die, is lower. Rain is predicted for the next forty-eight hours, so that the full effects of the floods will not be known for some time. The river guards everywhere are on the alert to precaution and aid the inhabitants.

RHINE 25 FT. ABOVE NORMAL.

COLOGNE, Germany, Dec. 31. —(Canadian Press.)—The rivers of southern, western and northern Germany are high above their banks, and the floods threaten great destruction. The Rhine is twenty-five feet above normal and still rising, and the waters are encroaching on the city proper. The Moselle railway service and others have been discontinued. Torrents from the Harz mountains have swept away bridges and undermined railway embankments. Many homeless are making their way out of the Rhine cities of Coblenz, Duisburg and Treves. At Duisburg 2,000 barges have been wrecked.

The Danube is rising to such dimensions that the smallest tributaries have become rushing torrents, and the fields are vast lakes. Lake Constance is expected to overflow hourly.

Spreading of the floods is reported from Hamburg and Bremen.

DAMAGE IN SPAIN.

MADRID, Dec. 31.—All parts of Spain report torrential rains, accompanied by floods and inundations. No loss of life has been reported thus far, but the material damage is great. A despatch from Granada reports that the Guadalfeo river has overflowed its banks at Salobrena, destroying irrigation works and inundating great tracks of land where cane sugar is grown.

Wind and water played havoc in the country around Valencia. Many cattle perished and great damage was done to fruit groves.

REEVE R. SCOTT IS NOT OPPOSED

APSLEY NEWS.

APSLEY, Dec. 31.—Nomination day passed off quietly, with little or no interest shown by the general public, less than a dozen ratepayers attending the meeting in the town hall. However, there was no dearth of aspirants for municipal honours, the following being nominated: For Reeve, Norman Lean and Duncan Brown. Councillors, Ben Coones, Archie Downing, Joe Tucker, Bruce Reid, Wm. Earnshaw, Sr., Vernal Windsor, Herb Tucker, Russell Hales. The last three belong to the young generation, and if elected would no doubt infuse a little pep into the board.

Chandos township will have no election, though nominations were as plentiful as fleas in a dog's hide. Dave Campbell was nominated to oppose Robert Scott for Reeve, while eleven names went in for the four vacancies for councillors, but when it came to a show down they all backed out except three of the old councillors and Alf. Davis, who takes the place of Albert Hall. Reeve Scott thus enters on his sixth year of Reeveship.

The annual Christmas tree in connection with St. George's church Sunday school was held on Monday evening, the scholars being guests at a tea at the parsonage, with a programme of seasonable games in the parish hall, which were hugely enjoyed by the little folks, followed by a distribution of gifts from the tree, and an entertainment of moving pictures. Besides the parents of the children providing eatables, the following ladies supplied cakes, etc.: Mrs. J. Downing, Mrs. Stanley Windsor, Miss Myrtle Windsor, Mrs. Spence, while Mrs. Dean very kindly contributed boxes of candy and gifts for the tree.

St. Stephens, Chandos, contributed the highest offering of the churches in the Apsley Mission at the service on Christmas Day, constituting a record for this, the smallest of the four churches, which is a distinct honour.

CAMPBELLFORD NEWS

CAMPBELLFORD, Dec. 31.—The star performer at every nomination meeting in Campbellford is easily George E. Morrison, the painter, so proficient at his calling that he is known as an artist and who is recognized as the town's most eloquent orator. Like Demosthenes his resonant periods would vie with the sound of the ocean waves breaking on a rock bound coast. The late Patrick Henry in his impassioned plea for liberty or death had nothing on Campbellford's eloquent advocate of equal rights for all and special privileges to none.

Men and women come to the nomination meetings here for no other reason than to hear Mr. Morrison's annual oration. He is always nominated for some position to give him a chance to speak. His address is the one rift in the financial horizon, the wellspring in the arid desert of dry facts and figures. He strikes out with all the force and accuracy of a boilermaker swinging a sledge, he is often rather painfully frank in his reference to the town's public servants either collectively or as individuals, his shafts of criticism are pointed and barbed but his wit is sparkling and his similies are apt. "Campbellford has as much use for two policemen as a mermaid has for a bathing suit" was his manner of dealing with the question of the town's moral and material security at Monday night's meeting. Perhaps his masterpiece on that occasion was a clever parody on "The Charge of the Light Brigade" in which the Council was likened to the "Gallant Six Hundred" hemmed in on all sides by the Russian guns.

Year after year Mr. Morrison has been scattering his oratorical pearls lavishly to audiences that laughed at his bright humor and applauded his higher flights of eloquence but when election day came round they appeared with the usual ingratitude of an electorate to forget the man who only a few days before they acclaimed a genius.

But Mr. Morrison has acquired wisdom. He is not a candidate for office this year having wearied of affording the voters an opportunity to rend him.

Merchants Complain.

Local merchants complain of the recent increase in the parcel post rates, which have been practically doubled by the department, the new schedule being now in operation. A Campbellford merchant sending a parcel of goods to a point in the country over the rural routes will now pay 10 cents a pound, if the distance does not exceed 20 miles. The former rate was 5 cents a pound.

The merchants say that the new rates make it harder for them to compete with the department stores in the big cities.

Seymour's Finances.

P. B. Nelson, who was deputy-reeve in Seymour in 1924, calls the Examiner's attention to the fact that in the financial statement for 1925 it appears that last year there was an overdraft of $4,720.42, and claims that this is misleading. On this amount there was a rebate of about $3500 from the highway department, so that the deficit in 1924 was not over $1500.

The auditors' report shows that in 1924 the township had a balance of $820.83 over all expenditure, the total assets amounting to $6,966.77.

Shooting Match.

There was an old-fashioned shooting match at the home of James Stewart, near Menie, on Tuesday, the prizes being turkeys and other fowl. About 50 marksmen took part and there were some close contests.

C. S. Gillespie of Campbellford, was present as a spectator to watch the marksmanship of men with whose fathers he had hunted years ago, and persuaded to take part in a contest with a rifle he borrowed from one of those in attendance. So close was the shooting of Mr. Gillespie and his opponent that after four shots had been fired by each it was necessary to use a compass to decide which had come closest to the bullseye. The judges decided the contest a draw, and Mr. Gillespie allowed the other man to take the prize.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

HAVELOCK, Dec. 31. —Three candidates nominated for reeve, seven for council and nine for Board of Education was the result of the Havelock nomination meeting held in the town hall on Monday evening, December 28. W. T. Curtis, the present reeve, all the members of council and the three retiring school trustees were nominated for re-election. The following is a list of the nominees:

Reeve—W. T. Curtis, S. S. Joyce, R. Sanderson.

Council—R. E. Campney, Alf. Spencer, Jas. Ketchen, Jas. Scott, D. McAdam, R. Sanderson, Firman Haig.

MARMORA, Dec. 31.—At the close of the nominations in Marmora the nominees present, commencing with Reeve G. B. Airhart, briefly addressed the electors. The problem of increased school accommodation was dealt with by various speakers. Three propositions are being advanced. One is to purchase the Presbyterian Church and fit it up as a primary room. The second proposition is to enlarge the present school to the dimensions which it possessed before the fire of 1915, whilst the third idea held out is that of a consolidated school. Dr. D. Thomson, Chairman of the School Board, who has served thereon for eleven years, mentioned the fact that in the possible event of children having to commence school at the age of five, an extra teacher to the present number would be a necessity.

There wasn't much to choose between the two teams in speed and stick handling, but Parkdale shaded their opponents in combination, while Lount and Dick Gossett were stronger defensively.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

GREAT INTEREST AMONG THE FANS

Last Night's Battle Has Them All Keyed Up For St. Mary's Game.

Last night's thrilling 30 minute overtime battle in Kitchener has increased the local hockey interest to fever heat and this condition will be reflected in a crowded ring tomorrow night, when the Petes play their first home fixture of the season with the fast St. Mary's team of Toronto as their opponents.

The Blue and White squad came through the long battle last night without injuries and although they were naturally a tried lot when they arrived home at noon today, they should be fit and ready for tomorrow's test. The whole Peterboro squad will get into this game, and St. Mary's will also be well reinforced with subs, so that the pace should be fast from the start and remain that way.

Reserved seat tickets are in demand—and the indications are that there will be a real old-time crowd on the side-lines to see the lid pried off the Senior season.

St. Mary's are a strong outfit and the homsters will have to be at their best to finish in front.

DRUGLESS HEALERS MAKE SUGGESTIONS

Want Some Changes Made in Act Regulating Practices.

TORONTO, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press)—Drugless practitioners numbering some 150 met last evening in the reception room of the Parliament Buildings where the amended regulations to the Drugless Practitioners Act were considered before Attorney General W. F. Nickle. Though practically all the various drugless cults were present at the meeting only the Chiropractors were heard from. Through their counsel objection to various amendments that had been made since last meeting was taken and suggestions for further changes made in the provisions were put forward, most of which were promised favorable consideration by Mr. Nickle and passed on to Earl Lawson, counsel for the Board of Regent for incorporation in the act, if found satisfactory to them.

WAR OFFICE BITTER ON PROPAGANDA

Expresses Confidence That Soldiers Will Resent Communist Efforts.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—(Canadian Press.)—Communist propaganda in the navy already having been dealt with by authorities, they are now turning toward the breaking up of similar propaganda in the army. The Army Council has issued a letter to all commanding officers at home and abroad, calling attention to a leaflet recently distributed among the troops throughout the country by the communists.

Sir Herbert Creedy, permanent under-secretary for war, who signed the letter, expressed confidence that all ranks will deeply resent these efforts to beguile them into disloyalty. He asks the various commanders to communicate the letter to the troops.

PARIS, Dec. 30 (Canadian Press).—Aviaotr Darque, flying in a hydro airplane which carried 1,113 pounds weight, established what is said to be the world's record for 100 kilometres (62.14 miles). His average time was 172.595 miles an hour, notwithstanding the fact that a gale of nearly 50 miles an hour prevailed at the time of the flight.

PEACE RIVER EXILES MIGHT RETURN HOME

WINNIPEG, Dec. 29 (Canadian Press).—Canadians in the United States who abandoned their Peace River homesteads two years ago, when times were particularly hard, are making constant inquiries concerning conditions for making a return migration there next spring, according to R. N. Munroe, assistant divisional commissioner of immigration for the western district, who has just completed an inspection of the Peace River territory.

Peace River farmers who two years ago were heavily in debt, today have between $400 and $500 in the bank, Mr. Munroe stated. There was general prosperity and everyone was optimistic about the future and in a mood to stay. Anything could be grown in the Peace River soil, Mr. Munro asserted. Improvement of conditions in the district was due to several factors, the chief among which he cited a material reduction in the freight rates. Other contributory factors were the plentiful harvest garnered without mishap, better grain and cattle prices.

The need of the community was for more trackage leading directly out than at present, while settlers in the southern areas were sorely in need of adequate transportation facilities.

He was certain that the generally improved conditions in the Peace River district would lead to a great influx of new as well as former settlers.

SOLE BASIS OF CANCER HEREDITY

People Born Without Strain of Disease Immune, Says Doctor.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press).—The sole basis of cancer is heredity, and people born without a strain of the disease are immune, Dr. L. C. Strong of Bussey Institute of Harvard University declared here at the conclusion of a symposium on cancer conducted by the American Society of Zoology.

To this announcement, however, Dr. Strong added the condition that even where hereditary traces exist, environmental factors would seem to be necessary as irritants in order to make the disease active

DAREDEVIL HOLDS UP ... MAIL FOR MOVIE

What is said to be the most daring plane change in mid-air was caught by the camera for "The Sky Raider," the Encore Picture featuring Jacqueline Logan and Captain Charles Nungesser, the world's greatest living Ace, at the Capitol Theatre to-day.

Dare-devil Douglas Cheuvront was especially engaged for this hazardous feat. Flying at an altitude of three thousand feet, Cheuvront climbed to the top of his plane and stood upon the upper wing with nothing to hold on to and the plane traveling at the rate of one hundred miles an hour. Then the second plane approached and flew directly over him. With a mighty spring Cheuvront leaped for the other plane, while those on the ground gasped. But once more the famous dare-devil was successful, for he just caught the outer corner of the lower wing and, after a struggle, pulled himself up. With his added weight, the plane lurched dangerously and it was a few seconds—which seemed more like hours—before the pilot succeded in righting it. But the intrepid Douglas continued to climb through the slanting fusilage toward the cockpit, for this is what the action of the story called for —and what the camera must record.

As marvelous as was the feat, it is only one of the many thrills with which "The Sky Raider" abounds. After it was over, Captain Nungesser, who brought down one hundred and five plans during the World War, went to young Cheuvront and, shaking his hand, said, "My boy, I wish that I could have had you with me in the war. You would certainly have made a great name for yourself, and probably have gotten the Croix de Guerre."

An added attraction at the Capitol Theatre for the last three days of this week will be a demonstration of the new Charleston dance, with special Charleston song and costume, by Miss Jessie Hodgson, who will appear between the seven and nine o'clock performances, each evening.

"WHEN THE DOOR OPENED" GREAT OUTDOOR DRAMA

Adapted from James Oliver Curwood Story and Directed by Reginald Barker

Jacqueline Logan Heads Fine Cast

Lovers of the great out-of-doors have a rare treat in store for them in the William Fox production of "When the Door Opened" which comes to the Regent Theatre today.

This thrilling tale of the great Northwoods was adapted from the novel by James Oliver Curwood and directed by Reginald Barker. A rare combination, since both men are famous for their ability to portray stories of the great outdoors—the one with a pen—the other with the motion picture.

"When the Door Opened" has its locale in Canada and the company went to the Canadian woods to film the exteriors. The scenic effects are therefore authenic and superbly beautiful. The story is filled with thrilling situations, including a spectacular flood and an exciting runaway.

Besides Miss Logan and McGrail the all-star cast is made up of Frank Keenan, Robert Cain, Margaret Livingston and Ray Laidlow.

AT THE GRAND

For swiftness of action, brilliancy of color, inherent humor derived through striking contrast in situations, keen satire and music that fits the tale, "The Mikado" stands as one of the most brilliant gems in the realm of light opera, as presented by Brandon Brothers specially selected cast, now on a transcontinental tour and coming to the Grand Opera House on Monday, January 4.

Every striking characteristic of this Gilbert and Sulivan masterpiece is properly accentuated by stellar principals and an efficient and well drilled chorus.

The theme of "The Mikado", the pursuit of "Nanki Poo", son of the Emperor of Japan, by "Katisha," a maiden, whose locks have been whitened by the flight of years, but who, as she herself says, "has a right elbow worth going miles to see" is so well known that it would seem useless to set out a synopsis of the action. It affords "Nanki Poo" in the guise of a minstrel and "Yum Yum", ward of "Ko Ko", Lord High Executioner, who has never even killed a Grasshopper, the severest test of histrionic ability, for in the course of the story he becomes the storm center and the savior of nearly every intricate and humorous situation, this is developed.

"Katisha", who claims the right to wed "Nanki Poo", "Pooh Bah", who holds all the other high positions in the Empire and "The Mikado" himself, play prominent parts but they are subordinate in importance to that of the Lord High Executioner.

In this important role Harlan Erickson has made and maintained a reputation throughout the continent as one of the best "Ko Ko's" in America. The entire cast is of the same high standard and the chorus of beautifully trained voices make the production one long to be remembered by music lovers.

IN MEMORIAM

McCAULEY—In Loving Memory of our dear husband and father, who was called to rest on December 31, 1923.

Two years have passed since our dear father left us;
The blow was great, the shock severe;
We little thought his death so near.
Only gone a while before us,
We shall meet him bye and bye;
If we are prepared to enter
The bright mansions in the sky,
For there is hope—a blessed hope—
Which our dear Lord has given;
When days and years have passed and gone
We all may meet in heaven

THE CIVIC SLATE

The following list gives the order in which the names will appear on the ballots tomorrow. In order to avoid confusion, with s many names appearing, the given names are omitted, also the explanatory note that is printed opposite each name on the ballot. On the ballots, however, the names as given below stand out in large type, and the names follow the exact order given here. It will, therefore, be simple to mark on this sheet the slate for which you are to vote, and transfer the crosses to the ballots.

It is important to note that in the list of ten candidates for the Aldermanic Board you must put an "X" opposite four, and must not put "X's" opposite more than five. In the Board of Education list you may vote for one, two, three, four or five, according to your wishes. The list of polling places is printed on another page. Mark your list tonight, find out where you vote, and cast your ballot early tomorrow morning in one of the most important municipal elections at which you have ever been given the opportunity to vote.

A NEW YEAR MOTTO

"The Helping Hand."

This Life is nothing more or less,
Than little acts of kindness;
A good word here, a service there,
To lift from mankind some great care.

So let us daily, thoughfully,
Pursue our way rejoicingly;
For I'll help you, and you'll help me,
And this a happy world will be.

Begin it now and carry on
So when the year is past and gone,
In meditation you can smile.
For living's really been worth while.

Oft we sit and think of him,
And our hearts are sad with pain;
Oh, this world would be a heaven,
Could we hear his voice again.

Peterboro Girl Makes Good

Went out into the world with a Peterborough Business College Diploma, and has a bright future ahead of her. She writes as follows in appreciation of the training by Principal McKone and teachers that prepared her for the position she holds:

TORONTO, Ontario,
September, 1925

DEAR MR. McKONE:

Through Miss MacMahon of the Underwood Typewriter Company, I secured a position here with (——) Insurance Brokers, 61 Adelaide Street East.

You will remember I went to London, after leaving the College, for a short holiday. When I came to Toronto I went to see Miss MacMahon, as you suggested. She sent me out that afternoon to interview(——), and I started with them the next morning.

There seems to be plenty of work in Toronto for capable girls, but Miss MacMahon will not recommend anyone who cannot type fifty words a minute and whose shorthand is not fairly good.

I started in at an initial salary of $800.00 a year. This will be increased as soon as I become more familiar with the business.

Thanking you and your teachers for the kindly interest you took in me while a student in your college and afterwards until I secured a position.

I remain, Yours very sincerely,

PARENTS—Get particulars about our training NOW. Have your boy or girl start Monday, Jan. 4th, the opening of our Winter Term.

MOST OF US STILL WORSHIP IDOLS

By GRENVILLE PIPER.

(Copyright, 1925, by The McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

CIVILIZATION is a pretty thin veneer after all. At least most of us are still heathen idol worshippers. The only difference is that we keep our idols in our brains, while our primitive ancestors kept their idols in their temples.

Idol worship would not be so bad if idols were always real representations of something real. The trouble is that men begin by using idols as a means to worship and end by making them objects of worship.

This is the history of the ancient heathens in a sentence. And it is the history of us civilized moderns as well.

We are always taking something that is only a means to an end and making it an end in itself. In our personal careers, we form habits that help us meet the challenge of our jobs and our lives. In religion, we formulate dogmas that help us realize how far we have seen into spiritual realities. In politics we organize political parties with which to run governments. But we forget the one thing we should remember about these habits, dogmas and parties.

They are instruments to use; they are not idols to worship.

Life does not stand still. When the problems of our surroundings change, we may have to change our habits in order to meet them. As the race gains a deeper insight into spiritual realities we should see to it that our dogmas report that deep insight. When new days bring new duties in politics we must adjust and readjust our political machinery until it really does the things needed at the moment. When we don't, when we simply mutter the catch-word of yesterday instead of thinking through the problems of to-day we are worshipping idols.

Years ago I read somewhere a parable that says what I have just said and says it better.

In an olden time a father built a home for his family. It was finished and furnished except for one thing. A little altar around which they gathered to pray had not been set in place.

A family council was called to decide where it should be placed. The mother wanted it in the kitchen, for it was in the kitchen that she was most perplexed by cares. The father wanted it in the library, for he felt nearest to spiritual realities when he was among his books. The son, who was socially inclined, thought it should be in the room where guests were received, so that a stranger might know that this family worshipped God.

The council turned into a quarrel about the location of the altar. Finally the mother said: "See here, we are allowing a quarrel about the location of the altar to destroy the very spirit the altar is supposed to symbolize. Let's give the altar to the baby and allow her to place it where she will."

The little girl was sitting on a rug before the open grate watching the figures in the fire, saying, "There goes a Queen to her wedding; there goes a King to battle." When they gave the altar to her she said, "See, the fire is dying down, let's put it here," and she tossed it into the fire.

The altar was a shaft of polished and perfumed wood, and as it burned the flames released its fragrance until its sweet odors filled the whole house—the the library, the reception room. The elusive spirit of the altar surrounded all the members of the family as they went about, each in his favorite room.

But they had to destroy the altar to preserve its spirit. Even the altar had to be an instrument rather than an idol.

FIRST NEW YEAR'S EVE SERVICE AT ST. ANDREW'S, CAMPBELLFORD

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—For the first time in its long history a watch night service was held in St. Andrew's church on New Year's eve, when grey-haired Presbyterians as well as younger members of the congregation gathered to speed the parting and hail the coming years, many of those in attendance taking part for the first time in such a service. There was a good attendance and an excellent musical programme was given by the choir under the leadership of the organist, William Pearson, Miss Helen McDonald rendered a solo appropriate to the season.

Rev. James Grier preached from the words of the Saviour, "I Am the Door," following the parable of the sheep fold as found in the tenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. The aptness of the Saviour's expression was dwelt upon by the preacher, who said that a door was the symbol of the separation of the family from the outer world, the symbol of security from sinful influence and the symbol of hospitality. The home which in 1926 does not know the Lord, the speaker said, ceases to be a home and becomes a mere stopping place for men and women.

At midnight the passing of the old year was marked by the tolling of the church bell 12 times while the congregation bowed in silent prayer, and then the New Year was welcomed with a lively peal.

AT CHRIST CHURCH.

The usual watch night services were held in Christ Church on New Year's eve, when the rector, Rev. G. C. Clarke, preached an eloquent sermon fitting to the occasion and the choir rendered a fine programme of music. By special request the Christmas music will be continued at the evening service Sunday.

Special service was held on New Year's Day when Holy Communion was administered.

Heavy Coal Charges.

The Board of Education ordered a car load of American furnace coal for use in the schools and the price paid for the fuel alone was $133, while the freight charges amounted to $200. The duty on the shipment—as it is only hard coal that is admitted free to Canada—was $24.

This was one of the accounts passed by the Board at the regular December session Thursday night, when the following trustees were present: Major J. M. Bygott, chairman; Trustees O'Sullivan, Dr. Longmore, Irwin, Loucks, Lynch, Stephens and Benor. It was announced that Trustee Jeff, who has been in a Toronto hospital for some time, is making satisfactory progress and is expected home on Monday. Mr. Jeff is an appointee of the Town Council and his term expires this year, but if he wants the position again, it is likely that he will be re-appointed. Another appointee whose term expires, is Trustee Benor, who is nominated by the Counties Council, and his re-election at the January session of that body is regarded as a matter of course.

Board Has Surplus.

The Board ends the year with a surplus more than sufficient to pay the salaries of the High and Public School teachers for the month of January as the most rigid economy has been practiced during the past 12 months. There has been no outlay except for salaries and fuel in 1925. In his address at the nomination meeting, retiring Mayor Meyers asked the Board to go slow in the matter of spending money, but the only way in which a further saving could be effected would be by reducing salaries, and this could not be done, the trustees say, without impairing the present high efficiency of the staff.

The Board in 1925 received a grant of $8,553 as the County's share of maintaining the High School, an amount which is the highest ever obtained from this source. An additional grant of $100 has also been received; $50 for each of the Cadet corps in the two schools. The year was started with a slight deficit but close watching of expenditures has created a surplus.

It is estimated that it cost $93 a year to educate a student in the High School, a low rate when compared with that of Colborne, for example, where the annual expense per student is $104.

New Year's Concert.

The young people of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, held a pleasant and unusual function in the school room on New Year's Day, when they entertained the young people formerly connected with the congregation, who have left town but who returned to spend the holiday here.

There was a good attendance, an excellent programme well rendered, and the happy reunion was thoroughly enjoyed. Miss Helen McDonald presided, and Rev. James Grier, the pastor, welcomed the visitors in a short address.

The following was the programme: Piano solo, by Miss Jean Anderson; reading, Miss Bertha Blue; solo Miss Hazel Atkinson; violin solo Kenneth Collison; duet, Mrs. Hay and Miss Helen McDonald; reading Miss Lillian Hay; piano solo, Miss Irene Stephens; selections by the Blue orchestra.

The feature of the entertainment was the performance on the violin of Geneath Collison, who is only 11 years old, and who is regarded as Campbellford's musical prodigy. His work reflects credit not only on himself but on his teachers, the Sisters of St. Joseph's Convent. The numbers which he rendered were "Traumerei" and "Humoresque," the latter being given in response to an insistent encore. Kenneth comes of a musical family, his father being known as one of the best singers in town, and his brother Arthur, who accompanied the young violinist, being a prominent member of St. Andrews choir.

GIFT TO MARY McARTHUR.

The girls in the fitting room of the Weston Shoe Company on Thursday presented Miss Mary McArthur, who has given up her position there, with a beautiful onyx ring with a pearl setting. Miss Mildred Cooke made the presentation and Miss Jessie Cochrane read the following address:

Dear Miss McArthur—It is with deep regret that we learn that you are leaving us to find employment elsewhere. We are sure you will make many friends wherever you go and so that you will not forget the days spent with us we would ask you to accept this ring as a token of our esteem.

Signed on half of the girls in the fitting room of the Weston Shoe Company.

Mildred Cooke.
Jessie Cochrane.

Miss McArthur made a fitting reply, thanking her former co-workers for their gift and for their kindness to her during the three years she spent with them. She assured them that she would miss them very much and that she would never forget them.

Miss Hazel Labrash of Rochester, and her brother Howard of Madoc, are spending the holidays with friends in town.

R. J. Jarvis, who spent several weeks in a military hospital in Toronto owing to injuries received in the Great War, has returned home very much improved in health.

TWO ARRESTED FOR OLD CRIME

OVER A YEAR AGO.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—Police Chief Brown arrested Charles and Harry Delling, young men who are wanted in Belleville on a charge of breaking into a store in that city over a year ago. Chief Kidd came from Belleville and took the prisoners back with him.

The Delling boys were living with two brothers a short distance from town and were in engaged in cutting wood for a farmer when taken into custody. Chief Brown located them after having been notified by Chief Kidd of Belleville, to be on the lookout, as word had reached him that they were in this vicinity.

The accused were also figure in a local horse deal. They purchased a horse from J. R. Wilkinson, of town, paying $5.00 down and agreeing to settle for the balance in monthly installments. Before the first payment fell due they sold the horse to a Trenton man, who gave them a cheque for the purchase price, but when this was presented at the Campbellford bank there was no money to meet it. The brothers Charles went to Trenton and got from the buyer of the horse $20 in cash and a cheque for the balance. When arrested he had $17 of the money left and Chief Brown induced him to turn this over to Mr. Wilkinson on account. The latter will receive the balance of what is owing him when the Trenton man's cheque is cashed.

BUILDING INSURED.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press.)—The barns connected with the plant of the paper mills here were completely destroyed by fire early this morning. The fire was discovered by some people returning from a dance at 2 a.m. and the alarm was given and the fire brigade worked until 5 o'clock.

All the horses were saved, but the building, a frame structure, including a large quantity of feed, is a total loss. The property was insured.

Roland Dinwoodie, of Campbellford, Injured in Saskatchewan.

ARM BADLY CUT.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Dinwoodie, Rear Street, have received word of the serious illness of their son, Roland, who is farming at Govan, Sask., the illness being the result of an accident. He was cutting wood with a circular saw when his left arm came in contact with it, the saw cutting through the fleshy part clear to the bone, all the ligaments being severed. Mr. Dinwoodie lost an eye a year ago, and has since been unable to judge distances, a fact which he says accounts for his coming into contact with the saw.

Blood poisoning set in in the wound in his arm, and this was followed by an attack of septic pneumonia, caused by the drug administered to the patient when his arm was dressed. He is now in a serious condition.

CHURCH BELL FLUNG ORGANIST TO DEATH

Body Thrown 90 Feet When Bell Released.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press).—When the big bell at St. Adelbert's Polish Catholic Church on Atwell Avenue failed to call the congregation to mass on Friday morning, Walter Chamienie, 44-year-old organist, climbed into the tower to see what the trouble was. Finding the bell jammed, he set about remedying the matter. When the wedged bell was released it carried the man off his feet, and his body went hurtling through space to the churchyard, 90 feet below. Death was instantaneous. The organist lived with his 14-year-old daughter. His wife and three-year-old daughter are abroad.

CHEAPER PASSAGE LURES EMIGRANTS

Van of Prospective Stream Starts For Canada.

LONDON, Jan. 2 — (Canadian Press Cable).—The first couple of passengers to travel under the new emigration agreement between Great Britain and Canada, whereby the steamship rate for settlers was reduced to three pounds, left for Canada to-day on the liner Montcalm.

Thousand Enquiries.

An official circular outlining the new emigration agreement between the British and Canadian Governments, which came into force on Friday, says it is evident that the scheme is making strong appeal. During the past fortnight, the director of Canadian emigration received over a thousand enquiries in excess of the normal number and was able to accept during the past week a number of families more than were accepted during the previous six weeks.

Farmers Applying.

C. H. Dix, European colonization manager of the Canadian National Railways, in an interview yesterday, said that since the new three pound steamship rate between Great Britain and Canada has been announced, the Canadian National offices in Britain have been inundated with thousands of applications from prospective settlers. Some of the applicants are experienced in farm work, while others are not.

BRITAIN PLANS CHEAPER POWER

NO DETAILS YET.

LONDON, Jan. 2. — (Canadian Press).—British Government has completed a comprehensive plan for cheapening the national supply of electricity. The details of the plan will not be available until next month, when the cabinet is expected to sanction the necessary legislation by Parliament, but the general scheme is the unification of electrical power plants by areas, a large reduction in their number and the erection of super stations with trunk lines and feeders to carry the power about the country. The underlying principle kept in mind by the electricity commissioners who have been studying the problem for more than a year is to encourage and assist the local authorities rather than to undertake state control. The taxpayers will bear only a small direct burden.

YOUNG COMPOSER'S SUCCESS BELATED

Mary Garden Stars in Opera Premiere.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—In far away Turin, Franco-Alfano, a young composer, ill and threatened with blindness, received New Year's cheer yesterday when the cables told of the great success of his first opera, "Resurrection" in its premiere here Thursday night.

Chicago critics were unanimous in their praise of the production, which provided Mary Garden with one of her most effective vehicles and which attracted one of the largest crowds in Chicago's operatic history.

But combined with the pleasure expressed over its artistic success was a note of melancholy when it became known that since the opera was accepted for production, the composer, whom success has thus far passed by, had been taken ill.

MOST OF US STILL WORSHIP IDOLS

By CLARE FRASER.

(Copyright, 1925, by The McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

CIVILIZATION is a pretty thin veneer after all. At least most of us are still heathen idol worshippers. The only difference is that we have our idols in our brains, while our primitive ancestors kept their idols in their temples.

Idol worship would not be so bad if idols were always and only symbols of something real. The trouble is that men begin by using idols as a aid to worship and end by making these objects of worship.

This is the history of the ancient heathens in a sentence. And it is the history of us civilized moderns as well.

We are always taking something that is only a means to an end and making it an end in itself. In our personal careers, we form habits that help us meet the challenge of our jobs and our lives. In religion, we formulate dogmas that help us realize how far we have seen into spiritual realities. In politics we organize political parties with which to run governments. But we forget the one thing we should remember about these habits, dogmas and parties.

They are instruments to use; they are not idols to worship.

Life does not stand still. When the problems of our careers change, we may have to change our habits in order to meet them. As the race gains a deeper insight into spiritual realities, we should see to it that our dogmas report that deep insight. When new days bring new duties in politics, we must adjust and readjust our political machinery until it really does the thing needed at the moment. When we don't, when we simply mutter the catch-word of yesterday instead of thinking through the problems of to-day we are worshipping idols.

Years ago I read somewhere a parable that says what I have just said and says it better.

In an olden time a father built a home for his family. It was finished and furnished except for one thing. A little altar around which they gathered to pray had not been set in place.

A family council was called to decide where it should be placed. The mother wanted it in the kitchen, for it was in the kitchen that she was most perplexed by cares. The father wanted it in the library, for he felt nearest to spiritual realities when he was among his books. The son, who was socially inclined, thought it should be in the room where guests were received, so that a stranger might know that this family worshipped God.

The council turned into a quarrel about the location of the altar. Finally the mother said: "See here, we are allowing a quarrel about the location of the altar to destroy the very spirit the altar is supposed to symbolize. Let's give the altar to the baby and allow he to place it where e'er he will."

The little girl was sitting on a rug before the open grate watching the figures in the fire, saying, "There goes a Queen to her wedding; there goes a King to battle." When they gave the altar to her she said, "See, the fire is dying down, let's put it here," and he tossed it into the fire.

The altar was a shaft of polished and perfumed wood, and as it burned the flames released its fragrance until its sweet odors filled the whole house—the the library, the reception room. The elusive spirit of the altar surrounded all the members of the family as they went about, each in his favorite room.

But they had to destroy the altar to preserve its spirit. Even the altar had to be an instrument rather than an idol.

FIRST NEW YEAR'S EVE SERVICE AT ST. ANDREW'S, CAMPBELLFORD

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—For the first time in its long history a watch night service was held in St. Andrew's church on New Year's eve, when grey-haired Presbyterians as well as younger members of the congregation gathered to speed the parting and hail the coming year, many of those in attendance taking part for the first time in such a service. There was a good attendance and an excellent musical programme was given by the choir under the leadership of the organist, William Pearson, Miss Helen McDonald rendered a solo appropriate to the season.

Rev. James Grier preached from the words of the Saviour, "I Am the Door," following the parable of the sheep fold as found in the tenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. The aptness of the Saviour's expression was dwelt upon by the preacher, who said that a door was the symbol of the separation of the family from the outer world, the symbol of security from sinful influence and the symbol of hospitality. The home which in 1926 does not know the Lord, the speaker said, ceases to be a home and becomes a mere stopping place for men and women.

At midnight the passing of the old year was marked by the tolling of the church bell 12 times while the congregation bowed in silent prayer, and then the New Year was welcomed with a lively peal.

AT CHRIST CHURCH.

The usual watch night services were held in Christ Church on New Year's eve, when the rector, Rev. G. C. Clarke, preached an eloquent sermon fitting to the occasion and the choir rendered a fine programme of music. By special request the Christmas music will be continued at the evening service Sunday.

Special service was held on New Year's Day when Holy Communion was administered.

Heavy Coal Charges.

The Board of Education ordered a car load of American furnace coal for use in the schools and the price paid for the fuel alone was $133, while the freight charges amounted to $200. The duty on the shipment—as it is only hard coal that is admitted free to Canada—was $24.

This was one of the accounts passed by the Board at the regular December session Thursday night, when the following trustees were present: Major J. M. Bygott, chairman; Trustees O'Sullivan, Dr. Longmore, Irwin, Loucks, Lynch, Stephens and Benor. It was announced that Trustee Jeff, who has been in a Toronto hospital for some time, is making satisfactory progress and is expected home on Monday. Mr. Jeff is an appointee of the Town Council and his term expires this year, but if he wants the position again, it is likely that he will be re-appointed. Another appointee whose term expires, is Trustee Benor, who is nominated by the Counties Council, and his re-election at the January session of that body is regarded as a matter of course.

Board Has Surplus.

The Board ends the year with a surplus more than sufficient to pay the salaries of the High and Public School teachers for the month of January as the most rigid economy has been practiced during the past 12 months. There has been no outlay except for salaries and fuel in 1925. In his address at the nomination meeting, retiring Mayor Meyers asked the Board to go slow in the matter of spending money, but the only way in which a further saving could be effected would be by reducing salaries, and this could not be done, the trustees say, without impairing the present high efficiency of the staff.

The Board in 1925 received a grant of $8,553 as the County's share of maintaining the High School, an amount which is the highest ever obtained from this source. An additional grant of $100 has also been received; $50 for each of the Cadet corps in the two schools. The year was started with a slight deficit but close watching of expenditures has created a surplus.

It is estimated that it cost $93 a year to educate a student in the High School, a low rate when compared with that of Colborne, for example, where the annual expense per student is $108.

New Year's Concert.

The young people of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, held a pleasant and unusual function in the school room on New Year's Day, when they entertained the young people formerly connected with the congregation, who have left town but who returned to spend the holiday here.

There was a good attendance, an excellent programme well rendered, and the happy reunion was thoroughly enjoyed. Miss Helen McDonald presided, and Rev. James Grier, the pastor, welcomed the visitors in a short address.

The following was the programme: Piano solo, by Miss Jean Anderson; reading, Miss Bertha Blue; solo Miss Hazel Atkinson; violin solo Kenneth Collison; duet, Mrs. Hay and Miss Helen McDonald; reading Miss Lillian Hay; piano solo, Miss Irene Stephens; selections by the Blue orchestra.

The feature of the entertainment was the performance on the violin of Geneath Collison, who is only 11 years old, and who is regarded as Campbellford's musical prodigy. His work reflects credit not only on himself but on his teachers, the Sisters of St. Joseph's Convent. The numbers which he rendered were "Traumerei" and "Humoresque," the latter being given in response to an insistent encore. Kenneth comes of a musical family, his father being known as one of the best singers in town, and his brother Arthur, who accompanied the young violinist, being a prominent member of St. Andrew's choir.

GIFT TO MARY McARTHUR.

The girls in the fitting room of the Weston Shoe Company on Thursday presented Miss Mary McArthur, who has given up her position there, with a beautiful onyx ring with a pearl setting. Miss Mildred Cooke made the presentation and Miss Jessie Cochrane read the following address:

Dear Miss McArthur—It is with deep regret that we learn that you are leaving us to find employment elsewhere. We are sure you will make many friends wherever you go and so that you will not forget the days spent with us we would ask you to accept this ring as a token of our esteem.

Signed on half of the girls in the fitting room of the Weston Shoe Company.

Mildred Cooke.
Jessie Cochrane.

Miss McArthur made a fitting reply, thanking her former co-workers for their gift and for their kindness to her during the three years she spent with them. She assured them that she would miss them very much and that she would never forget them.

Miss Hazel Labrash of Rochester, and her brother Howard of Madoc, are spending the holidays with friends in town.

R. J. Jarvis, who spent several weeks in a military hospital in Toronto owing to injuries received in the Great War, has returned home very much improved in health.

TWO ARRESTED FOR OLD CRIME

OVER A YEAR AGO.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—Police Chief Brown arrested Charles and Harry Deline, young men who are wanted in Belleville on a charge of breaking into a store in that city over a year ago. Chief Kidd came from Belleville and took the prisoners back with him.

The Deline boys were living with two brothers a short distance from town and were in engaged in cutting wood for a farmer when taken into custody. Chief Brown located them after having been notified by Chief Kidd of Belleville, to be on the lookout, as word had reached him that they were in this vicinity.

The accused men also figure in a local horse deal. They purchased a horse from J. R. Wilkinson, of town, paying $5.00 down and agreeing to settle for the balance in monthly installments. Before the first payment fell due they sold the horse to a Trenton man, who gave them a cheque for the purchase price, but when this was presented at the Campbellford bank there was no money to meet it. The brother, Charles went to Trenton and got from the buyer of the horse $20 in cash and a cheque for the balance. When arrested he had $17 of the money left and Chief Brown induced him to turn this over to Mr. Wilkinson on account. The latter will receive the balance of what is owing him when the Trenton man's cheque is cashed.

BARN BURNED AT CAMPBELLFORD

All Horses Were Saved From Paper Mills Property.

BUILDING INSURED.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press.)—The barns connected with the plant of the paper mills here were completely destroyed by fire early this morning. The fire was discovered by some people returning from a dance at 2 a.m. and the alarm was given and the fire brigade worked until 5 o'clock.

All the horses were saved, but the building, a frame structure, including a large quantity of feed, is a total loss. The property was insured.

FORMER CITIZEN BADLY INJURED

Roland Dinwoodie, of Campbellford, Injured in Saskatchewan.

ARM BADLY CUT.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 2.—Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Dinwoodie, Rear Street, have received word of the serious illness of their son, Roland, who is farming at Govan, Sask., the illness being the result of an accident. He was cutting wood with a circular saw when his left arm came in contact with it, the saw cutting through the fleshy part clear to the bone, all the ligaments being severed. Mr. Dinwoodie lost an eye a year ago, and has since been unable to judge distances, a fact which he says accounts for his coming into contact with the saw.

Blood poisoning set in in the wound in his arm, and this was followed by an attack of septic pneumonia, caused by the drug administered to the patient when his arm was dressed. He is now in a serious condition.

NO PEACE TREATY WITH ABD-EL-KRIM

France Won't Give Him the Dignity of Emir of All Tribes.

PARIS, France, Jan. 22.—(Canadian Press).—France will establish and maintain peace in Morocco without entering into negotiations with Abd El Krim, the Riffian chieftain. This was made plain by both Premier Briand and M. Painleve, war minister, in the course of a discussion in the Chamber of Deputies on the credits necessary to carry on operations in Northern Africa.

Premier Briand declared that Abd El Krim was a mere caid, exercising authority over certain tribes; the French Government preferred to deal with each separate tribe alone, rather than confer upon Krim the dignity of negotiator as a Moslem Emir.

CHURCH BELL FLUNG ORGANIST TO DEATH

Body Thrown 90 Feet When Bell Released.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press).—When the big bell at St. Adelbert's Polish Catholic Church on Atwell Avenue failed to call the congregation to mass on Friday morning, Walter Chamienie, 44-year-old organist, climbed into the tower to see what the trouble was. Finding the bell jammed, he set about remedying the matter. When the wedged bell was released it carried the man off his feet, and his body went hurtling through space to the churchyard, 90 feet below. Death was instantaneous. The organist lived with his 14-year-old daughter. His wife and three-year-old daughter are abroad.

Farmhouse of James Turner Near Omemee Was Destroyed.

CHEAPER PASSAGE LURES EMIGRANTS

Van of Prospective Stream Starts For Canada.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press Cable).—The first couple of passengers to travel under the new emigration agreement between Great Britain and Canada, whereby the steamship rate for settlers was reduced to three pounds, left for Canada to-day on the liner Montcalm.

Thousand Enquiries.

An official circular outlining the new emigration agreement between the British and Canadian Governments, which came into force on Friday, says it is evident that the scheme is making strong appeal. During the past fortnight, the director of Canadian emigration received over a thousand enquiries in excess of the normal number and was able to accept during the past week a number of families more than were accepted during the previous six weeks.

Farmers Applying.

C. H. Dix, European colonization manager of the Canadian National Railways, in an interview yesterday, said that since the new three pound steamship rate between Great Britain and Canada has been announced, the Canadian National offices in Britain have been inundated with thousands of applications from prospective settlers. Some of the applicants are experienced in farm work, while others are not.

Three young sharks were recently caught by three men fishing from a boat.

BRITAIN PLANS CHEAPER POWER

NO DETAILS YET.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press).—British Government has completed a comprehensive plan for cheapening the national supply of electricity. The details of the plan will not be available until next month, when the cabinet is expected to sanction the necessary legislation by Parliament, but the general scheme is the unification of electrical power plants by areas, a large reduction in their number and the erection of super stations with trunk lines and feeders to carry the power about the country. The underlying principle kept in mind by the electricity commissioners who have been studying the problem for more than a year is to encourage and assist the local authorities rather than to undertake state control. The taxpayers will bear only a small direct burden.

YOUNG COMPOSER'S SUCCESS BELATED

Mary Garden Stars in Opera Premiere.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—In far away Turin, Franco-Alfano, a young composer, ill and threatened with blindness, received New Year's cheer yesterday when the cables told of the great success of his first opera, "Resurrection" in its premiere here Thursday night.

Chicago critics were unanimous in their praise of the production, which provided Mary Garden with one of her most effective vehicles and which attracted one of the largest crowds in Chicago's operatic history.

But combined with the pleasure expressed over its artistic success was a note of melancholy when it became known that since the opera was accepted for production, the composer, whom success has thus far passed by, had been taken ill.

THE ALDERMANIC VOTE

Ald. W. J. Hancock, appointed to the Council during last year, after having been unsuccessful at the polls, had the satisfaction yesterday of heading the aldermanic race with the fine total of 3,130 votes, while Robert S. Cotton, making his first appearance in municipal politics, was a close second. Only nine votes behind.

Alderman E. M. Turner, the only other member of last years council to be re-elected, was third; while the other two winners in the aldermanic sweepstakes were Chas. A. Ackerman and George MacDonald, two well-known citizens who should make good in the municipal service.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

The outstanding feature of the Board of Education campaign of course was the fact that Mrs. W. R. Morris, the only woman candidate to be elected to any civic office in Peterborough and who has done a great deal of work as a member of the Board of Education, was the defeated candidate in the field of six who competed for the five places.

Mrs. Morris defeat was undoubtedly due to her uncompromising championship of the Collegiate extension project.

She has led the fight for technical education and was a martyr to that cause yesterday, inasmuch as the majority of the voters, knowing that Mrs. Morris favored the programme being put into effect without a vote of the ratepayers, declined to support her in that policy.

Two new members are added to the Board of Education, E. R. Wilson and J. A. McNabb, both of whom are making their debut in public service.

NO DAYLIGHT SAVING

Peterborough will operate next summer on standard time.

The verdict of the electors yesterday was against daylight saving, all but five polls turning in a majority adverse to changing Peterborough's clocks during the summer months.

The result, while somewhat of a surprise, in view of the largely signed petition in favor of daylight saving presented to the Council last summer, is not so remarkable after all, when it is remembered that many of the petitioners were not voters and, therefore, could not do anything to affect yesterday's verdict.

The plebiscite, while it showed considerable support for daylight saving, revealed such a substantial majority against the proposal that the matter can be considered settled for another year at least.

Peterborough will at all events be spared a controversy over this vexed question when the warm weather arrives—and for that mercy both sides should be thankful.

THE BOYS' PARLIAMENT.

The Older Boys' Parliament, which has been holding its fifth session in Toronto, is a splendid education in citizenship for those boys who are elected to this body and their associates who receive the benefit of their experiences after the members return.

Any movement that tends to encourage Canadians to take a real interest in public affairs and to instil a desire in young men to serve their fellow-citizens in municipal, Provincial and Federal government deserves to be encouraged and supported.

It is obvious that this Boys' Parliament, which brings its members into the environment of Queen's Park and gives them an opportunity to see something of how the wheels of state operate, must have an important educational value along this line.

In addition, of course, the subjects discussed are of peculiar interest to Ontario boys generally, but these could be as successfully handled, of course, by an ordinary conference.

What makes this movement an outstanding success is that it develops among its members an interest in and ambition for a political career, and that is a result that should earn for the Boys' Parliament the enthusiastic plaudits of all who realize how necessary it is that good citizens should be willing to serve.

THE MAYORALTY CONTEST

Ex.-Ald. Dr. Holloway, who was defeated in a mayoralty contest two years ago, will be Peterborough's Chief Magistrate for 1926, having been elected after one of the closest races on record by a majority of 49 over Alderman Phelan.

The two candidates are close personal friends and their campaign was conducted on lines of good sportsmanship and in the best of feeling, so that the result yesterday was accepted by the victor gracefully and by the loser in true sporting style.

Mayor-elect Holloway did good work as a member of the Council before, his views in regard to the necessity of economy are generally endorced. He has been sound on other issues and should fill the position to which he has been elected with dignity and success.

At the same time there will be regret that the services of Alderman Phelan are being lost. He has made an excellent chairman of the Finance Committee, has not missed a Council meeting in six years, has fought for Sunday bathing and for the people on other issues, and has won respect by his refusal to hedge on important questions.

With a vacancy in the Council existing as the result of the resignation of Alderman Crowe to accept a civic position, The Examiner, while recognizing that it is the prerogative of the new Council to appoint a successor, suggests that it would be a graceful act that would be appreciated by the 2,590 electors who voted for him yesterday and many of those who did not, to appoint Alderman Phelan.

In view of his six-year record and the fact that he polled 488 more votes than the sixth candidate in the aldermanic race, there would be every justification for such a course.

...Exercise.

...Reviewers are usually people who would have been poets, historians, biographers, etc., if they could: they have tried their talents at one or the other, and have failed; therefore they turn critics.—Coleridge.

Discontent is the first step in the progress of a man or a nation.—Oscar Wilde.

Live with men as if God saw you; converse with God as if men heard you.—Seneca.

Men's plans should be regulated by the circumstances, not circumstances by the plans.—Livy.

Confidence is that feeling by which the mind embarks in great and honorable courses with a sure hope and trust in itself.—Cicero.

The desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it.—Bacon.

A THOUGHT.

A PORTRAIT OF A THEORIST

We are forever drawing distinctions between men of thought and men of action.

The passion of the man of thought is to see the world right.

Civilization in general doubtless reaps rich rewards from the give-and-take that goes on between these two extreme types of men. Much of the color and creativeness of history comes out of the conflict between the men who sacrifice effective action to pure theory and the men who sacrifice pure theory to effective action.

Men of pure thought have furnished history with its martyrs.

Men of pure action have furnished history with its dictators.

Most of us are mongrels in whom thought and action come to compromise.

Unless we happen to be one of the darlings of the gods, destined to serve mankind by our over-emphasis upon either thought or action, our problem is to avoid the sins of the extreme theorist and the sins of the extreme bustler and to achieve a decent compromise between abstract theory and practical action.

In effecting that compromise it is useful to have in mind as vividly as possible portrais of the extreme man of thought and the extreme man of action.

Seevral years ago, in a series of thin little booklets called The Bookman Biograhies, G. K. Chesterton wrote a six thousand word study of Thomas Carlyle, in the course of which he made many random comments on men of thought and men of action. I have amused myself this evening by piecing together his scattered sentences about men of thought into this portrait of a theorist.

"These men of abstract theories and remote hopes exist in every country and in every age.

"They are wilfully and eternally in opposition.

"They do not agree sufficiently with the active powers even to argue with them with any profit.

"Their ideal is so far away that they do not even desire it with any immediate hunger.

"They count it a pleasant and natural thing to live and die in revolt.

"They are ready to be critics; they are ready to be martyrs; they are emphatically not ready to be rulers.

"It is easy enough to the man who lives in a contented impotence; the man who luxuriates in an endless and satisfied defeat.

"He does not desire to be effective; he only desires to be right.

"He does not desire passionately that something should be done; he only desires that it should be triumphantly proved to be necessary."

Clearly this is not a portrait most of us envy. Society as a whole may, as I have said, derive benefit from a few such uncompromising gadflies who scorn to pollute their theories by acting. But it may be said of the average man, as Chesterton said of Cromwell, that "he does not wish to die and be a spectacle, but to live and be a force."

—Glenn Frank.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT

Write it 1926.

Judging by the daylight saving vote, the favorite song of many Peterborough people is "Oh, I Hate to Get Up in the Morning."

Yesterday's Mayoralty contest was one of the cosest on record in Peterborough, the McIntyre-Taylor campaign alone surpassing it.

Young candidates made a fine showing yesterday and their success will be an inspiration to others to try their luck next year.

Sunday bathing was endorsed at every polling subdivision. The verdict was emphatic enough to dispose of the question for good.

BRITAIN, THE CHRONIC DECADENT.

Although ex-Ambassador Harvey received an effective and conclusive reply from C. W. Barron, when he set forth the decadence and ultimate collapse of the British Empire, he can at least name plenty of people who have entertained the same views. They go back over something like four centuries. In the reign of that Queen Mary who preceded her sister, Queen Elizabeth, Britain lost her last foothold on the European continent, and the Queen said that the name of that place would be found engraved on her heart after her death. How many of you remember the name of the place, even when you have passed through it on the way from Paris to London? In the following reign, King Philip of Spain decided to give the final blow to the dying British Empire, and negotiated a loan with the city of Genoa to finance the Spanish Armada. The decadent merchants of the city of London made a few remarks to Genoa, and the loan was not forthcoming for a year. In the reign of Charles I., after the Quaker Penn had received a concession for developing the little-valued American colony in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, the Dutch fleet inflicted a humiliating defeat and ravaged the Estuary of the Thames. Somewhat later Blake put the Dutch fleet out of business.

After the series of Marlborough victories in the low countries, it was admitted that Louis XIV. was not quite so all-powerful as his courtiers had assured him. But the English debts to be faced, following the Treaty of Utrecht, were so formidable that pessimistic Whig statesmen, recently achieving the union with Scotland, were convinced that the end was not far off. After the Napoleonic War, the British debt per capita was nearly as heavy as it is now, and every sixth person in England was a registered pauper. The Empire was on the toboggan, and only needed a push. Free trade and the repeal of the Corn Laws marked the end of England's greatness, according to some prominent Englishmen. The Boers, twenty-five years ago, in the opinion of American newspaper editors still spared to us, had practically completed the work of the centuries. Probably the ex-Kaiser considers the Empire dead, even if the well-known English stupidity does not recognize the fact. It is about the liveliest corpse of all the ages, but George Harvey is in good company and faithful to a long tradition.—Barron's.

The Swede and his gang had taken prompt warning by the flight of Lacy and Sweetie, and had decamped for parts unknown—apparently taking Salt Tonstall Adams along and leaving no addresses behind them.

Lacy and the lawyer carried the burden of tattered silk and shattered nerves that was Aunt Celimena into the house and upstairs to Miss Liddy's room, where they deposited it gently on the bed to the tune of its own grunts and groans delivered in perfect jazz time.

Connemara and her respective maid, hearing them on the stairs, and not being able to think of anything more original to do in the first moment of reflection allowed them to plunged back into the wardrobe and sank into the oblivion of moth-ball-scented darkness.

Miss Liddy took one look at the remnant on the bed, observing in her best unattached manner, "If a woman her age must drink, you'd think she'd have enough sense to have it analyzed first," and left the room. Liddy's whole life consisted principally of leaving rooms. It gave her some place to go.

Later, when Lacy demanded anxiously of her what had become of the young lady whom he had brought to the house that morning, she was stubbornly noncommittal.

"I guess she just evaporated like all bad things do eventually," she said deliberately, and the thinips tightened.

With a muttered observation, Lacy went into the library and stared at the smooth surface of the big desk. The three ten-dollar bills were gone!

Aunt Celimena, meanwhile, lay upstairs on Mrs. Parker's bed and indulged in the enjoyment of her recently acquired aches and pains. As she felt each bruise where the ropes had bitten into her flesh while she was tied up like a common or garden variety of everyday pirate victim, she compared herself to Joan of Arc and a few of the other great martyrs of history.

How could a girl with every reason to lead a normal and well-regulated life go so far astray as to get mixed up with smugglers, pirates, cave men, women of no reputation, and what not?

Where would it all led to? And where was Connemara at this very minute? Perhaps she had run off with a band of Russian bomb throwers. Maybe at this very second she was flying through the air astride a church steeple that had been pried loose from the mother building by a stick of dynamite. True, Connemara had red hair. But that was not a excuse for anything and everything.

With her throbbing pans beating in perfect rhythm to the horrible thoughts running through her tired brain, she dozed off into a slumber fraught with demons and goblins such as never before inhabited a nightmare.

Connemara in the wardrobe, in such close contact with the reformed Sweetie, even where their positions were equalized by the darkness and lack of air, still felt that aloofness that had been bred in her for many generations back. She wanted to help Sweetie, but in spite of that, she could not bring herself down to the other girl's level.

It flashed through her mind that maybe the fault was not entirely her own. Perhaps Sweetie was not altogether sincere in her desire to go straight. There seemed to be a small cloud hardly perceptible, casting a shadow athwart their bond of understanding.

When the stuffiness of their cooped-up quarters became unbearable, they opened the door the fraction of an inch and were greatly relieved to see Aunt Celimena sprawled out on the bed writhing in the throes of a delirous battle with pirates and corsairs. The girls decided to risk a hasty but silent flight.

They opened the door and took one step. But a mass of the housekeeper's clothing had dropped to the floor during their imprisonment and entwined itself about their feet. They had no time to notice this trivial, but nevertheless important circumstance.

Fate has a way of creating a joke and then making it seem more laughable by creating another joke right on top of the first.

Connemara was slightly in the lead as she started the second step in her flight toward the door her feet did not function at all. She tripped over the mass of clothing on the floor. Sweetie, who was close behind and going at the same speed, also tripped. Fate did not overlook a thing in arranging this little performance. The bed upon which Aunt Celimena slept lay directly in the path of the two girls. They flopped down—kerplunk—squarely on top of the sleeper just as that estimable lady was being attacked by fifteen thousand buccaneers. She was suddenly awake, filled with a justifiable desire to fight for her life.

Sheer numbers finally decided the encounter and Aunt Celimena stood face to face with Connemara. Or, rather, she lay face to face with Connemara.

"My God, Connemara!" she screamed, in a tone of voice that should have awakened the ancient kings of Egypt, and fell back in a dead faint.

Sweetie crouched in the corner, rubbing a sore spot on her arm with three fresh ten-dollar bills.

First, he went over the ... into the water because he could ... very well help himself, which w... indefinite, and secondly, he had ... idea about securing help for his ...mates, an object that became commendably definite with the long cumbersome polo coat he had donned at the beginning of the chase in order to cover as well as possible the rather startling harlequin suit he had worn to the fancy dress party. He succeeded in shedding it, however, abandoning it to the waters of the Sound, a sacrifice made without the slightest compunction because he remembered that it did not belong to him at all but to Salt Adams, who had generously pressed it upon him when they started off in the motor.

After swimming for some ten or fifteen minutes, swiftly but cautiously, he decided, it was safe to make for the shore, which he could distinguish close at hand. Presently he found a footing among the rocks and was soon threading his way among the trees, bound he knew not whither, except that reason told him he was sure to come to a road shortly if he kept on in the direction he was going. He was wet and cold but determined. In due time, as he had suspected, he came to a macadam driveway. A short distance ahead he distinguished the black shadow of a house. For this he aimed without hesitation and mounting the broad steps to a capacious veranda, was soon pressing the door button and rattling the great iron knocker. The house was in complete darkness. After a long wait a light appeared in the hall and the door was opened by a partially clad manservant.

These conclusions were:

That even persons tainted at birth with a cancerous strain cannot develop the disease spontaneously, but only through the agency of environmental factors, chief among which is frictional irritation.

GERMANS WORRY.

Seek Voice in Naming Permanent Officials in the League Secretariat.

By FREDERICK KUHN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—With Germany about to enter the League of Nations it was learned that a controversy had arisen between the Wilhelmstrasse and Geneva over the appointment of German permanent officials to the league secretariat. Germany insists she should have a voice in their naming while Geneva so far maintains this is a league prerogative, leaving Germany only to choose her delegates to the league assembly.

Efforts to meet the difficulty will soon be made by the league secretary, Sir Eric Drummond.

The main features of the proposals are a reduction of the country's peace strength from 10,000 men to 8,000, and the retention of six military districts instead of 15, as at present, while in the other rural districts the Defence Rifle Associations will replace the active citizen force. There will be no decrease in the air force, said Col. Creswell, but on the contrary estimates for the air force will be increased.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets At Any Cost

Mr. A. O. Norton, the millionaire Jack Manufacturer, of Boston, who recently died, was a great "booster" for Zutoo Tablets.

He suffered from headaches from childhood and when he found Zutoo Tablets stopped these headaches in a few minutes and left no bad effect, he began recommending them to his family and friends. In an unsolicited letter, Mr. Norton says in closing:

"My family use them when ever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

"Bon Voyage"

TO all mariners leaving port this 1st of January, 1926, in the good ship "Canada", we wish a most prosperous voyage through the uncharted sea of the New Year.

What lies before us is as completely unknown as was the Western Sea to Columbus and his companions, so that as we set sail we need faith.

This "saving faith" all true Canadians share. We firmly believe in our glorious destiny though for a time our ship of state may sail against head winds.

We shall yet reach the land of our ideals—a "land to love"—where unnumbered millions of free, prosperous, happy and well-governed people will find a home

MONTREAL FIRE FORCE SAVED 119 PERSONS IN 1925

Lady Luck Frequently Deserted Firemen Throughout the Year.

MANY CASUALTIES.

Last January a Succession of Accidents—Wall Buried Eleven.

MONTREAL, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press)—Old Man Jonah rode with the Montreal firemen nearly all last year. From the opening of January, one disaster seemed to follow another. On the second day of that month a ladder truck collided with a tram-car at the corner of Westmount Boulevard and Cote Des Neiges. Three firemen were hurt, one so badly that he is still on the sick list, and one of the horses was killed. On the same day a hose wagon came into collision with an automobile and the department lost another horse. On the third, four men of the Montreal Department one of the Westmount brigade were hurt at a fire on Sherbrooke St. west. Practically every day of the month saw one and sometimes two or three fire fighters casualties.

Then came the crowning disaster On January 28, the walls of a flaming building at 228 Lemoin street collapsed, burying 11 of the men. Ten were immediately rescued but the eleventh, Lieut. W. Desjardins, after remaining buried for eight hours with a thermometer ranging around 16 below, was finaly brought out, but after a desperate fight for his life he died in hospital two days later.

Fell 80 Feet Unhurt

On Jan. 31 the firemen, answering a call from St. John Batpiste church, found that a man who had been working with a companion on the roof had fallen 80 feet to the ground and had not even sprained an ankle. His companion, paralyzed with fear, did not dare descend, and the firemen had to raise a ladder to bring him down.

During March a house on Lagauchetere street caught fire. District Chief Pelletier responded with his men, little thinkng that it would be his last dash through the streets. The gas from the newly painted and varnished woodwork proved to be too much for him, and he died three hours afterward.

Nine firemen were hurt in the month of April, but they were all soon back on duty.

Used Gas Masks

On Sept. 8, in response to a call from a factory at 507 Viger Avenue, city firemen found that an ammonia tank had broken and that the fumes had overcome most of the workers. They were forced to use gas masks to turn off the valves and so stop the fumes. Seventy-five girls, employes of the factory, were rescued Of these 6 had to be taken to the hospital.

For the year, fire has claimed 8 lives, 107 people have suffered injuries and 119 people have suffered injuries and 119 owe their lives to the firemen.

NEW RUMOURS.

Ferguson Again Named For Federal Arena—Conference With Rogers.

TORONTO, Jan. 2.—(Canadian Press).—Hon. Robert Rogers, M.P. for Winnipeg South, reached Toronto from Ottawa and spent the afternoon in conference with Premier Ferguson. Premier Ferguson joined Mr. Rogers at the latter's room in the hotel. The arrival of Mr. Rogers and his conference with the Provincial Premier revived the rumor that Premier Ferguson is to enter Federal politics, possibly as a compromise between Right Hon. Arthur Meighen and C. H. Cahan, K.C., of Montreal, and is to lead the Conservative party in the next general election, which is to occur in June if party predictions are correct.

Mr. Rogers stated that he was leaving for Montreal immediately and expected to return to Toronto before he went to Ottawa for the session.

RADIO AWAKENS GIRL'S HEARING

Miracle, Says Winnipeg Girl, But Scientists Have Own Opinion.

DEAF AND MUTE.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 2 (Canadian Press)—Without the sense of hearing and mute for nearly twenty-two years, Miss Alice Hayes of Winnipeg, contemplates the future with renewed hope and is overcome with joy in the knowledge that her faculties may be completely restored to her.

It was at the home of a friend that Miss Hayes fixed the phones of a radio set to her ears Wednesday night. A few minutes later she exultantly jumped up from the instrument. She had detected the first sound since being deprived of her hearing in childhood.

The girl could hardly contain herself when the strains of a violin penetrated the silence which had hung over her life for years. She began to beat time and move in rythm. She turned to her mother and attempted to speak but was obliged to communicate her joy in writing.

Miss Hayes attributes her newly-found sense to a miracle. Scientists, however, do not call it such. They say that Miss Hayes has had the power of hearing all the time. The radio only taught her to concentrate on sound. These specialists agreed that radio might educate and teach the mind to concentrate. It would not create hearing, in the case of total deafness.

In going to her work Thursday, Miss Hayes heard the street cars and other sounds for the first time. A new feature lies before her, and there are possibilities that she will regain still more of her hearing and eventually recover her speech. The programme listened to by Miss Hayes was broadcast by CNRW of this city.

T. Rodwell, superintendent of the Manitoba school for the deaf, intimated that installation of radio in the school was under consideration Radio, he believed, would prove of great value in training residual hearing.

HINDENBURG'S FIRST RECEPTION

Eschewed Military Uniform, But Staff Glittered.

BERLIN, Jan 2. — (Canadian Press).—President Von Hindenburg officiated at his first New Year's reception in the executive mansion yesterday. Standing in the banquet hall, surrounded by his staff and Government officials, his imposing military figure was easily the most conspicuous among the gold and silver glitter of the gorgeous diplomatic and military uniforms, especially as he wore evening clothes.

Although entitled to don his Field Marshal's uniform, the President chose to conform, even in this detail, with the democratic spirit of the Government he represents, although a military atmosphere was created by the presence of officers of the general staff headed by Major-General Von Seeckt.

The diplomatic corps disposed itself in a semi-circle before President Von Hindenburg, flanked by Dr. Luther and Gustav Stresemann. The Papal Nuncio, Monsignor Eugenio Pacelli, conveyed New Year's greetings in behalf of the diplomatic corps, of which he is dean, saying: "The diplomatic corps begs to extend best wishes and blessings."

Shop-windows on parade

IN THE quiet and comfort of your home, newspaper in hand, the shop-windows of the town's best stores pass in review. Look at that charming little hat—just the style you have been looking for, and so reasonable!

And say, isn't that coat a darling? . . . Not only do you see illustrations of the merchandise, but you are told in detail of its merits and prices. A passing panorama that may be halted and started and halted at will. A shopping trip at home!

How long do you suppose it would take you to reverse the process—to go up one street and down another, until you had visited personally every worth-while store in town? And how exhausted you would be, physically and nervously.

There's no doubt about it. The modern way to shop is to read the advertisements, then make notes of the stores and the particular offerings that appeal to you. What a lot of time and bother such a method saves. You know beforehand what you want to look at, who has it, and what you will have to pay.

Read the advertisements. Make it a daily habit. The regular reader of advertisements is better informed, makes the family budget stretch farther, has more time for recreation, gets more value for her money, and profits in many other ways. Advertisements are frequently the most interesting news in the paper.

Every day these shop-windows are lined up for your inspection in this newspaper

EMPTY IRON BOX ON SHEDIAC BAY NOT CAPT. KIDD'S

TREASURE LORE.

SHEDIAC, N.B., Jan. 2.—No local residents have shown any sudden affluence which would justify the supposition that someone recently discovered here pirates' treasure or government gold of the French regime in Canada as was thought possible when an empty iron box with the date 1720 on it was found here. Two youths made the find on Milne's Point, Shediac Bay, while returning from their smelt nets. They found a large hole in the ground of recent digging and in the hole was an empty iron box, about three feet long, a foot wide and nearly three feet high. The box was badly corroded, rust having eaten out the bottom. There was evidence that the box had been locked, the marks of a chisel recently made, being plainly visible on the lock.

There was no indication of what the receptacle had contained. Brass and copper attachments with a crown, bear letters and figures indicating that they had been patented. The figures "1720" are visible.

The hole dug is within a few feet of the edge of a bluff overlooking the bay and is on land once occupied by Capt. W. Milne, a native of Aberdeen, Scotland, who was the first English-speaking resident of the south side of Shediac Bay.

Tradition From 1759.

So far as can be learned no person here knows how the chest came to be buried on the point. It is said that French warships wintered in port once, many years ago, and there is a tradition that before the fall of Quebec, in 1759, the commander, fearing capture, buried money to pay the soldiers at Quebec, on the smaller of two islands in the bay. There was much digging on this island in bygone years, but so far as recorded no coin was ever found.

A Scotch bark was stranded near Milne's Point about half a century ago, but whether this circumstance had anything to do with the mysterious chest is not known. It has been suggested that the iron box may have been used by contractors to carry funds for employees when the European and North American railway was constructed from Saint John to Shediac, about 70 years ago.

None of the theorists has as yet attributed the secreting of the iron box to the eminent privateer and gentleman of fortune, Capt. Kidd.

PACIFIC APPEAL TO DRUSE TRIBESMEN

Airplanes Drop Copies of Proclamation Behind Lines.

BEIRUT, Syria, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press) — A New Year's proclamation by M. De Jouvenel, French High Commissioner for Syria, entitled "Why are you fighting?" was dropped from airplanes yesterday over the territory of the Druse tribesmen. It throws blame for continuance of the struggle between the French and the Druses on Sultan Atrash, the tribal leader, and "foreigners who pay him," inasmuch as he has refused mediation of other tribesmen to bring about peace.

"I brought you the right to make your own constitution, choose your own Government and elect your leaders," says the proclamation. "In continuing to fight you are only combatting your own hopes for freedom. Only France can give you the liberty you desire."

M De Jouvenel concluded with an appeal to the Druses to give up the struggle before they are inevitably beaten, warning: "Druses, the only way you can conquer is to lay down your arms."

FRANCE WARS ON U. S. FILMS

Three Sources Unite To Compel Reduction in Importation.

WANT OWN MARKET.

PARIS, Jan. 2.—The future of the American moving picture busine s in France is quite uncertain. It would not be surprising if Parliament at an early date passed some sort of restrictive legislation on film imports, directed solely at the American pictures.

The opposition in France to the American films comes from three sources: French producers, who would like to see their chief competitors crippled; business men who recognize in the films a weapon of retaliation against the United States for raising high tariff barriers against the ncipal French products, and nationalists who believe that American ideas as portrayed in American films are corrupting French youth.

The producers are the most active of the three groups, however, and are now pressing for either a contingent, such as Germany adopted, which would limit the number of foreign films that could be brought in according to the number produced at home, or extremely high tariff rates which would put American films at a disadvantage compared to the French product.

Outlines Plan.

Pierre Gilles, moving picture editor of Le Matin, and also, by the way, a prominent official of Omnium Pathe Consortium Lutetia, the chief French distributing and producing organization, has been running a series of articles in Le Matin urging that measures be taken against American films. In a recent lengthy article he outlined the scheme which is supposed to be that approved by the French producers.

Importation of foreign films into France would be in the hands of French producers. They could bring in two feet of foreign film for every foot of film of their own manufacture. At present rates of production, this would mean that about 175 foreign pictures of average length could be imported annually. Importation is turned over to the French producers because it is hoped that with this lever they could force American producers and distributors to take French films for exhibition in the United States.

This limitation on American films is justified on the grounds that the United States has adopted the policy of protecting its industries, under which policy high tariffs have been levied on the principal objects of French manufacture such as textiles and toilet goods. The French producers, according to M. Gilles, can not be prosperous under present state of affairs, because American producers after they have paid for their films and earned a profit by the showings in the United States dump them on the French market for what they can get for them.

Tariff Schedules.

Accompanying this plan, and having for the same object the protection of French producers, is a provision by which films could be brought in outside the contingent. It is a schedule of tariffs so high that any picture brought in under its terms would be at a great disadvantage compared to domestic films.

A law very embarrassing to American producers is already on the books and may become effective Jan. 1, 1926. About five years ago Charles Pathe, the French cinema pioneer, obtained patents on a non-inflammable film. About three years ago he succeeded in getting a law passed here requiring that all films shown in France be printed on non-inflammable film, or, in other words, on his own film because he held the patents.

Enforcement of the law has been postponed from time to time by the Minister of Commerce, but it is now due to become effective Jan. 1, 1926. The American producers would like to see it postponed again, but are making little progress toward obtaining the extension because they have no Paris organization, and the different firms refuse to co-operate, being out to cut each other's throat at every opportunity. The French exhibitors are at work, however, because the law would mean higher costs for them.

If they fail it will mean that after Jan. 1 no new films can be imported unless they are printed on non-inflammable film. Old pictures can still be brought in until Jan. 1, 1928.

American moving picture men in Paris say that it will cost one-third more to manufacture non-inflammable film in the United States under the Pathe patents, and that the number of possible runs from a film will be reduced about 65. Loss of these runs, they say, may make a picture a loss which would otherwise be a profitable venture.

The Pathe people retort that they can furnish the film at only 10 per cent. above present film costs, and that the number of runs is only 50 below the number obtainable from inflammable film, and that shortly it will be just as efficient since during the last year they have increased the number of possible runs by 40.

They claim that the only reason why American producers now use inflammable film is that Pathe holds the patents, and that when the patents expire in 1931 the entire film industry will start using non-inflammable film, because it is non-explosive and can be used without danger to spectators.

Aliens to the number of 935 received certificates of naturalization in England during 1924. Russia headed the list with 351 men and fourteen women.

First Registry Marriage Solemnized In Turkey

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 2.—(United Press).—Turkey's first "register office" marriage has just been consummated, with the bride, groom and guests fox trotting at its conclusion.

The marriage contract which both parties signed stated that they enjoyed equal rights, that any act infringing such equality was a breach of the sanctity of the contract and that until living conditions should become easier, each must work for a living.

The final clause fixed the dowery at about $2,500 but affixed the provision that in the event of a divorce suit an indemnity of the same amount must be paid to which ever party sued the other. The bride was a Turkish school mistress and the groom a local official.

NAVIGATION CLOSED ON LAKE ONTARIO

Lighthouse Keepers Have Been Picked Up—Cobourg Open.

COBOURG, Jan. 2.—Navigation on this section of Lake Ontario has practically closed, excepting at Cobourg, which is a port that keeps open all the year round. The season has closed without the usual accidents and fatalities, which beset shipping in the district and that make the lives of the families of men, who go down to the sea in ships, anxious. The lights at many points on the lake, have been extinguished, and few navigators venture out after this official closing. Of course, at Cobourg the lights burn the year round. In the Bay of Quinte and eastern section of Lake Ontario Capt. C. W. Cole of Cape Vincent has been picking up the keepers of the Canadian lights, after they had completed their tasks. Two men employed by Capt. Cole are in winter quarters on the main docks. They will be as thoroughly isolated from the world for the winter season as can be imagined. The nearest shore is the Galloup Islands, where a company of some sixteen people are already provisioned for the winter.

MUSEUM SCIENTISTS WASTE PLACES OF GOBI TO DISCOVER THE ORIGIN OF MAN

Geologists Discovered Dinosaur Bones Few Yards From Camp First Day.

Just Begin Adventure.

Past Sixty Years of Research Serves To Dip Into the Subject.

By Evans Clark.

Sixty years ago human history ran back only as far as written records go—a few thousand years. Back of that was an uncharted region—with a few scientists first hazarding the guess that man evolved originally from the lower animals. Today the history of man has been traced quite definitely in its broad progress from one type of civilization to another more advanced back to ages when man himself was not quite man—many hundred thousand years ago. But recent dispatches from Roy Chapman Andrews, leader of the Third Asiatic Expedition of the American Museum of Natural History, in co-operation with the magazine Asia, underline the stirring fact that this adventure in human discovery has hardly yet begun. The past sixty years of scientific research into man's antiquity is a mere suggestion of what lies ahead: a lure that entices bold spirits to bear with hardship and danger to satisfy their craving for more, while the rest of the scientific world looks on in envious suspense.

That is why Mr. Andrews has been leading his corps of scientists into the heart of Central Asia—the Gobi Desert region of Mongolia. According to the testimony of Dr. Clark Wissler and other museum authorities his discoveries open up a new world, prehistorically speaking. Take a map and put a black dot on it wherever thorough searches have been made by qualified experts for fossil remains. Europe will be dotted all over with thick clusters in France, Switzerland, Northern Spain and Southern England, and scattered dots in Italy, Germany, Austria, North Africa and Syria—only a few months ago sub-human remains were discovered in Galilee, Palestine. The United States will be fairly well marked, with some dots in South America. But Asia—by all odds the greatest area of any continent—will show only two or three dots on all of its wide-flung territory.

While Europe has been gone over with a fine-tooth comb by anthropologists, with results which have given us practically all we know of early man, Asia has scarcely been touched. The difficulties have been so great that only a highly organized and securely financed expedition, operating with the efficiency of a modern army, could hope to accomplish much. Lack of transportation, frontier political conditions—often banditry—the suspicion and hostility of native Goverunments and peoples, sometimes topographical conditions almost unsurmountable, vast distances from bases of supplies—all these have operated to curb even the most hardy.

High Adventure.

And yet Asia, from the few evidences that exist, is probably richer in prehistoric prizes, for those bold enough to win them, than any other section of the globe. At least that is the theory which has animated the Third Asiatic Expedition, and it has probably been better fi ted to cope with every possible contingency than any other that has ever set out. When its story is finally written it will be not only the romance of able and dashing human leadership and organization but a rich blend of the excitement of the treasure hunt, the intricate suspense of the detective yarn, the high adventure of exploration and the intellectual thrill of genuine scientific advance.

The plan for the expedition was the fruit of the conviction of President Henry Fairfield Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History that Asia should be the next great area of prehistoric exploration, the fact that the museum's collection of existing Asiatic specimens was in need of expansion, the consuming interest of Mr. Andrews in this part of the world—gained through many years of experience on the much less ambitious first and second Asiatic expeditions, and the generosity of Mrs. Willard Straight (now Mrs. L. K. Elmhirst), J. P. Morgan, W. Averell Hariman, Childs Frick, George F. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Bernheimer.

It was organized with a thoroughness and administrative grasp that would do credit to a business corporation. Permanent headquarters—for the five years of its existence—were established at Peking, with laboratories for the preliminary examination and treatment of specimens. From this base various parties were organized to carry on work in the principal branches of science, each under the direction of a specialist in the field and all under the supervision of Mr. Andrews: zoologists and botanists to collect living animals and plants, paleontologists and anthropologists to search for fossil remains, archeologists to investigate ancient ruins, geologists and topographers to work on the physical features of the country, and moving-picture photographers to make a pictorial transcript of the whole operation. The main work has been carried on with a concentration of all these forces and their native assistants, traveling in a fleet of light automobiles and trucks, supported by a native camel train bearing the basic supplies. A most dramatic sight they made in their treks across the steppes.

Uncovering Dinosaurs.

Almost from the first day the expedition has made discoveries of importance—in some cases of the very first rank in scientific annals. One of Mr. Andrews' first reports gives something of the feel of the situation and describes the initial find.

"We left Kalgan on April 21, 1922. We got all the motor cars over the pass between China and Mongolia with no difficulty, although the pass has seldom been in worse condition. The geologists began to make observations at Kalgan and carried the work right across the pass, describing and photographing every foot of the way. When we were halfway across Mongolia our attention was attracted by some interesting geologic exposures and we stopped for camp. While we were preparing supper, Granger, Berkey and Morris—the three geologists of the party—began prospecting and within a few yards of camp discovered some bones of dinosaurs—the first discovery of these giant prehistoric reptiles in Northeastern Asia.

"As we approached Turin we saw a large caravan and decided to camp. Then I suddenly recognized the American flag and realized that it was the caravan of the American Museum. It had been five weeks on the way from Kalgan and had arrived just one hour before us. It was an inspiring sight as the seventy-five camels wound up from the plain with the American flag at the head."

The latest report from Mr. Andrews had come in the form of a cable a little over two weeks ago, followed closely, however, by press dispatches stating that difficulties with the Mongolian Government necessitated at least a temporary withdrawal. Mr. Andrews' cable was dramatic—cryptically so to those unfamiliar with the anthropological vernacular.

"Complete success," it read, "despite extraordinarily difficult conditions forty dinosaur eggs some larger and finer than first year's stop six cretaceous mammal skulls stop fine collection basal eocene complete set feet and part legs Baluchitherium stop extensive late paleolithic human culture corresponding Azilian probably older stop named these people the Dune Dwellers stop magnificent collection arrow spear points scrapers drills old hearths, charred animal bones no human stop few mousterian artifacts stop two premongol human skeletons. . . .

Early Man Not Confined to Europe

Translated into plain English, this means that Mr. Andrews and his corps have now definitely established the fact—which the backers of the expedition first held as a hypothesis—that the races of prehistoric man were not confined to Europe, but that Asia was the scene of at least some of this early human life. It raises the presumption that the entire development of man from the sub-human species, the outlines of which have been traced in Europe, took place in Asia also. And, more stirring still, it buttresses the theory of some scientists that Asia will finally produce concrete evidence that it was the "cradle of the human race," which will also fill in the gaps of our present knowledge of just how and when man came to be man and not some higher form of lower animal.

President Osborn of the American Museum has championed this theory for the past twenty-five years. As far back as 1900 he advanced the hypothesis that Asia might prove to be a sort of "paleontological Garden of Eden"—the homeland of many kinds of mammals which spread out from there both west into Europe and east into North America. What made him think so was the astonishing fact that the same kind of prehistoric mammals which have been dug up in Europe have also been unearthed in the United States. In April, 1900, he wrote that his indicated the dispersal centre might be half-way between.

Wyoming Linked to Mongolia.

On the first trip of the third expedition into the Gobi desert three years ago, Mr. Andrews came upon remains of two fossil bone-bearing beds in which the animals bear unmistakable resemblance to those found in the Rocky Mountain region of Wyoming. With them were the remains of two-legged dinosaurs whose range was previously known to have included both the southern part of England and the New Jersey shore of the United States. These discoveries fitted into the general theory of geologists that the continents of Asia and America were united at some period in dim geologic time by solid ground between what are now Alaska and Siberia.

But all this concerns the earlier forms of animal life, hundreds of thousands of years before the human species was evolved. Mr. Andrews' latest cable centres interest on man himself. So far the fossil remains of prehistoric man, with but one exception, have been found only in Europe, Africa or the western part of Asia Minor. The exception is that weird blend of human and higher ape, the earliest known form of man— "Pithecanthropus erectus"—dug up in Java, closely associated geologically with Eastern Asia. So far, North America has produced no fossil evidence of any early human species. Several skeletal finds have stirred the imagination of the public—the "Calaveras Skull," the "Lansing Skull" and the "Nebraska Man." Crude implements dug up near Trenton, N.J., were thought at first to show the existence of the most primitive human life there in glacial times. But none of these have stood the test of critical examination.

Origin Presumably Asiatic

The distribution of known human and subhuman fossils has led most anthropologists to conclude that, while a series of human races which gradually approach modern man in stature inhabited Europe, there is yet no proof of a European origin for any of them. Although Sir Arthur Keith of England holds to their European origin, most authorities agree that in all probability they were successive migrants from Asia—or, possibly, Africa. The recent discovery of the remains of a subhuman species in Rhodesia may throw light on this theory. The discovery of "Pithecanthropus" in Java raises a strong presumption that the origin of the race was Asiatic. While early fossil remains may come to light at any time in America, it is possible that human beings migrated here from Asia at a comparatively late stage in the development of man.

The glaciers which had flowed down from the north and covered a large part of the European Continent in earlier ages had receded, the climate had become much milder and a luxuriant forest growth had taken the place of the ice-age steppes. Man still lived in caves during the early part of this period, but apparently later abandoned them for the forest and open plains, where he erected some sort of rude artificial shelter. The first crude pictures which men began to scratch on the walls of caves several thousand years before this were also carved in the Azilian age, although, strangely enough, with much date from the same period, and other teeth of a somewhat similar sort have been unearthed near Weimer and in a cavern in Moravia. If these are not of some other large ape they may possibly indicate the presence of a creature sufficiently human to use the eoliths; but no responsible scientist is willing to assert it on the slim evidence at hand.

Some authorities find a possible solution in the Javan Pithecanthropus erectus—the erect ape-man. The remains of this strange creature, discovered in 1891 by the Dutch physician Eugen Dubois, consisted of several teeth, part of the skull and a leg bone. The reconstruction of this animal which anthropologists have made shows he had a head and face weirdly like both the manlike apes and the lowest type of man with a long projecting muzzle or snout. The proportions of his body are roughly those of a human being and he walked erect on long-straight legs—although much less developed than the Neanderthal man of the Mousterian period.

Civilization's First Step.

From surrounding evidence scientists conclude that this creature must have lived from 500,000 to 1,000,000 years ago and contemporaneously with the use of the eoliths found in Europe. Although remains enough to establish the fact with any certainty in Europe have not been found, it is possible that a similar species lived there at that time and was responsible for the eoliths. Future exploration in Asia may turn up a clue that will give the answer—eoliths and skeletons together.

Countless generations of subhuman men through centuries upon centuries of time used eoliths before it occurred to them to shape stones in such a way as to make them easier to use. The first stone chipped deliberately by the user in the accomplishment of a conscious aim marks one of the greatest revolutions in history. That act was pregnant with vast implications.

"Feebly developed along the line of intelligent purpose as that animal brain must have been," says Professor Wilder, "it devised the first step toward civilization; it has executed a definite purpose with those hairy simian fingers."

Flints of this sort were first found at Strepy, Belgium, and from this village the culture of that period has been named the Strepyan. It was contemporaneous with the third great glacial advance over Europe, between 150,000 and 175,000 years ago. The men who made this momentous advance were much further developed physiologically than Pithecanthropus. Fossil bones found near Heidelberg, Germany, and in Piltdown, England, furnish clues to what they were like: the so-called Heidelberg and Piltdown men, species midway between the earlier Pithecanthropus and the later Neanderthal race. From that time until the Mousterian period at least two distinct stages of culture development have been reconstructed out of European anthropological finds, covering a period of some 100,000 years.

So the chain of man's early progress to maturity has been pieced together, link by link, from earliest eolithic times, through the Strepyan and other culture levels, to the Mousterian, and up through the Azilian to the dawn of recorded history. Mr. Andrews's cable definitely establishes an Asiatic parallel between at least two of these links. To parallel more and to forge new links out of bits of stone and bone dug up on wind-swept steppe and desert and down remote, inaccessible mountain valleys is the stirring goal of future Asiatic exploration.

Stirling People Take Course Under Department of Agriculture.

STIRLING, Jan .2.— In Sidney township the councillors were elected by acclamation. Albert Reid, who has been reeve for several years, is being opposed by Mr. Clem Ketcheson, who has served on the council for several years and was deputy-reeve for 1925.

For deputy-reeve, Messrs. Roscoe Vanderwater and Ed. Pyear are in the field for the honors of this office.

Mr. Ray Atkin, district representative of the Ontario Department of Agriculture has all the arrangements completed for the opening of the School of Agriculture and Home Economics on Monday, Jan. 4.

The classes for the boys will be held in the town hall and those for the girls in the agricultural rooms. An able staff of teachers has been secured and many students are expected to avail themselves of the privilege of acquiring some knowledge of the various subjects that will be dealt with during the time from January 4th to March 12th inclusive.

The various cheese fatcories in this section are settling up their season's business with a showing equal to any former year and far surpassing in the most of cases. Evergreen factory with Mr. Robt. Lanigan as president, held its meeting on Tuesday. At this factory during the past season 24,097 lbs. of cheese were made, also 2,714 lbs. of whey butter and 2,457.2 lbs. of butter fat. The sales of cheese amounted to $50,028.53 and that of the whey butter and butter fat was $1,769.51. The shareholders' milk was worth $49.55 per standard of 3,000 lbs. of milk. The milk was drawn by the company and cost $2.60 per standard. Mr. John N. West was the efficient cheese maker in charge. His average lbs. of milk for a lb. of cheese for the season were 11.29 lbs. Mr. West is re-engaged as maker for 1926 and all the old officers were re-elected for the coming year.

The dance, held under the auspices of the Memorial committee, on Tuesday evening, was a very enjoyable affair. Music was furnished by Stirling's four piece orchestra. The proceeds amounted to $83.00.

The first photographs to be permanently fixed were made 100 years ago by a Frenchman, Niepce, although, some years earlier, Thomas Wedgewood, an Englishman, had obtained images which were not permanent.

For Deep Chest Colds
All colds should be treated with vapors, for vapors are breathed to the medication DIRECTLY to the air passages and lungs.
Vicks is a "vapor" treatment—a salve form. For deep chest colds you first apply hot wet towels to throat and chest to open the pores, then massage briskly with Vicks for 5 minutes, spread on thickly and cover with a flannel cloth.
Vicks not only penetrates like a poultice or plaster, but the ingredients, vaporized by the heat, are inhaled all night long.
This double action usually relieves the most stubborn cold.

...ST

...st of the great Caesar in a niche over the desk.

I soon regretted my flippancy as Mussolini's face took on an inspired expression, his eyes a curious dreamy look, and his voice sounded strangely moved as he replied, most reverently: "He—he is my ideal, my matser—Julius Caesar," his mobile lips caressed the name, "the greatest man that ever was."

Cesira, the Tyrannizer.

Since his illness society has seen him less, for he is forbidden medically any diet save that adoringly prepared by Cesira, an old farm woman, who accompanies him wherever he goes. Cesira looks after him, Cesira cooks for him and probably, in the manner of women, Cesira affectionately tyrannizes over her beloved master.

If Mussolini has a weakness it is for Italia, the lion Italia was two months old when she first made her debut, with collar and chain, in Mussolini's race-tpy; motor car, and Mussolini, with his lion, was a sight highly relished by she Romans. But, alas! Italia grew up and joined companions in the zoo, where every morning Mussolini goes to feed her and her four friends.

LABOURERS ARE MOTOR OWNERS IN NEW YORK

Hudson Maxim Tells Wondrous Tales to Wide-Eyed Londoners.

KNOCKS PROHIBITION

Says Grapes Piled Higher Than Houses, and Buildings Are Tall.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—After 28 years' absence Mr. Hudson Maxim, the American inventor, has returned to London to celebrate the 30th anniversary of his marriage with an English girl (Miss Lilian Durban), who has accompanied him after the long "exile," looking and feeling as English as ever.

"London has changed a lot," he remarked, when I called on him at his hotel, writes an "Evening News" representative.

"It certainly does look different seeing streams of motors and 'buses filling the roads which once were just specked with old horse-'buses and those comic hansom cabs.

"But in other ways London hasn't changed so much. You associate the town with short, low houses, unlike the sky-scrapers of New York, so it doesn't surprise you not to see the high buildings.

"Of course you haven't got so many automobiles over here. All my labouring men have a car each, and even my wife's charwoman, who gets 17s a day, comes to work in her car.

"My nigger cook has a car, and gets about £22 a month. When my charwoman quits work at four o'clock in the afternoon she goes in her car to meet her husband, who works in an ice-shop.

Prohibition a Calamity.

"Prohibition is a calamity," continued Mr. Maxim. "The crime resultant on Prohibition costs the United States millions of dollars a year.

"California, New Mexico, Arizona, and other Southern States are planting grapes as fast as they can, and in the grape season in the markets in New York and other eastern towns grapes are piled higher than the eaves of the houses!

"Thousands of waggon-loads pour into the cities for the manufacture of liquor, and the farmers manufacture cider and apple-jack.

"It was thought that the generation now growing up would not know the taste of wine when they reached maturity. They will not only know the taste, but they will know how to manufacture it, for in every home liquor of some sort is being made.

"A young girl now has no use for the fellow who doesn't carry a brandy flask full of liquor in his hip-pocket. The youngsters have lost all restraint, and it has become a fad to break every law in existence."

LOYALTY TO LEADER.

Devotion to Meighen Was Theme of New Year's Reception.

MONTREAL, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press).—Loyalty and devotion to Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen as leader of the Conservative party of Canada was one of the points which speakers emphasized at a New Year's reception given by the Liberal-Conservative Association here yesterday.

The main speakers were Hon. C. Ballantyne, Hon. Rodolphe Monty and Leslie G. Bell, M.P. for St. Antoine.

...ITH FASCIST

...as Enormous Re- Vitality — Nothing ...nt About Continent.

...s Caesar is my ideal, my master ... greatest man that ever was. ...nat is the statement of Benito Mussolini, Premier of Italy. It was made during an interview granted by the Fascist leader to Lady Drummond Hay, special correspondent of the London Daily Express. The full text of the interview is published below, through courtesy of The Daily Express.

By Lady Drummong Hay.

Liberty! Is there such a thing as liberty? Civilization is the inversion of personal liberty; in the long run it resolves itself into a matter of space—more space, more liberty, and those who would benefit from the advantages of civilization must necessarily pay in the coin of personal freedom. Wheo the Liberals call out for liberty they display their ignorance of the rudiments of the mechanism of Government.

Signor Mussolini's words, uttered in quiet, measured tones, quivered almost defiantly through the tense atmosphere of Italy's Temple of Freedom, which, imposing as it is in its symbolism, serves as no more than a theatrical background to a dramatic and overwhelming personality.

I was interviewing the Premier of Italy, who is also Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister of War, Minister of Marine, Minister of Air Forces and chief of the all-powerful Fascisti. It is the first time he has been interviewed since his illness, which made him fight rather shy of publicity.

I passed through what seemed to me endless marble corridors of the ancient princely palace where he transacts the whole business of Italy, and stood several long seconds at the door of his office, hesitating before the vast expanse of gleaming floor separating me from the great little man, who, seated behind an enormous desk, might well have been a statue, so immovable his attitude, so sphinx-like his expression.

At first he was reluctant to speak for publication. "Do you not find enough to write about, he asked, "in what you see here?' indicating the symbolical contents of the study, "and in me—as I am? striking a dramatic pose.

"The Apostle of Freedom in the Temple of Liberty, I smiled.

Denies That Liberty Exists.

"Mass cannot govern mass. Quantity cannot govern quantity. I maintain that there can be no such thing as liberty. It exists but in the imaginations of philosophers, who seek their unpractical philosophy from the skies. While mine, with a sweep of the hand toward the floor, "is drawn from very near the earth * * * for those of the earth.

"This philosophy, is it successful? Can you say that you are content with its fruits, as materialized in your ideal of Fascism?

"Fully content, came the deliberate reply. "Fully content with Fascism, with its results, with it sfuture promises.

"And while Italy is progressing, what about the other nations in Europe? How do you look on them?

"Nothing Can Stop Italy."

"Europe has an enormous reserve of vitality. All the great creations of the future, the impetus for important movements, philosophic, scientific, artistic, will come from Europe. There is nothing decadent about the old continent. Many centuries must elapse before there will be even the possibility of any deterioration of her strength or morale.

"Europe has nothing to fear, in spite of what certain alarmists try to propagate. Besides, he continued, dropping for the moment his attitude of restraint, "if Europe were in a state of decline, Italy would surely be the weakest of countries, considering she is the most ancient, and, as you have seen yourself, Italy is young, very young, vigorous, and nothing can stop her advance.

I next asked Mussolini whether there was any significance in the risings of the North African races—any danger to the white races. But he is no believer in the yellow and brown peril.

"None at all, he rapped out somewhat scornfully, "Europe is not done yet, and need have no apprehensions. Granted that Islam is more than a religion, that it is a power, and an enormous race and brotherhood, yet, not so long ago, when she knocked at the gates of Vienna it was in vain, and would be so again if ever she got so far—if ever.

Doesn't Drink—But Not "Dry."

Mussolini is a "dry advocate—for himself only.

"Prohibition? No. Why should I seek to deprive other people of their personal enjoyments? For ten years now I have given up drinking alcohol, except at some special party or gathering, but that is no reason why I should impose my taste on the nation in general.

...am very keen on a law, however, ...hose object is to protect the younger ...neration from the ravages of alcohol-

REVELRY NOT LIKED BY PARISH PRIEST

Attacks Made Especially on Dancing at New Year Festivities.

QUEBEC, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press)—New Year's revelries were denounced in strong terms yesterday by various parish priests of the city but especially by Rev. Father Dagneau, of Saint Couer De Marie.

Father Dagneau expressed his surprise at the constant disobedience of the faithful to the explicit ban placed on dancing and stated that, notwithstanding this he had reports that Catholics were in many cases enjoying themselves in these forbidden pleasures. He appealed to parents to prevent their children from violating the rules of the church and expressed himself as absolutely startled at the kind of life led in certain classes.

STRANGER THAN FICTION

The whole steamer had become eyes and there was nothing to see. Aloft, a lookout tried to peer over the fog, and far below him another strained to see under it. Hour by hour a seaman at the creeping bow looked into the blankness, and on the bridge the captain went from side to side, staring at nothing at all. For twelve hours he had stared so, seeing only the gray dusk become black, and black grow grey, again with the coming of another day.

She floated in a little island of water adrift in a universe of nothingness. The peering eyes saw scarcely beyond the growlers little hunks of ice rubbing against the steel plates. The watching eyes seized on these almost gratefully, then turned again swiftly to the vigil for bergs or for the warning flare of some fishing schooner lying here off Cape Race.

Far below the level at which the growlers nudged their way along the sides there were also eyes. Here in the engine room and the fire roon the eyes log in the columns for signal, time and resultant revolutions. To be entered—if.

The parting kept on through an age, then ceased like the muscles of a wrestler who yields. In the petty officers' messroom a cup slipped on the table already set. In the captain's cabin a dead pipe spilled its ashes.

The steamer lay still and there was water between the stem and this second shadow towering forty feet above the radio antenna. The steamer lay dead, but did not sink. A miracle could do no more; the iceberg caught and held the flat keel on a sunken ledge.

"A bunk for a lazy whale," said the man at the bow, to himself.

Now began a wrestling match between the ship and the berg that would hold its prey until it was ready. The ship spoke through the air to other ships: "S O S" with position. The berg played a slow game of giant and pygmy.

The engine room heard the gong and again the gong. Full, slow, ahead, astern, stop. It was a game of endurance and craft. Again and again the dial turned half, and the shaft thrust, and the man with the bit of waste touched this valve and that, looking now and then at the fireroom escape.

The steamer shook, grunted, pulled, rocked, tugging at the ice mountain like a toy portable engine hitched to the side of a dofy. Cries echoed from the ice wall. Far away other ships flashed "Coming!" and the wireless operator wondered if they would come in time.

The propeller slowed, gathered strength for its utmost, and then spun, churning water and ice. It stopped again. The vessel rested. It could do no more, for the time being.

Then the berg, like a playful giant, careened slightly. Men did not stop to ask why, though they could not have told. The propeller spun and the hull moved. A faint shudder, and the men felt once more the lift of waves. She backed away, bulkheads dry, and the radio called: "Need no assistance."

"Once, it was in the war, I remember," a voice began inthe engine room. But nobody paid any attention.

The United States Shipping Board freighter Saugus, Captain A. G. Velten, Valencia for New York with a cargo of lemons and onions, docked at the foot of Milton Street, Brooklyn, after going through this experience off Cape Race. Captain Velten said the Saugus was held fast for an hour. Along the waterfront old seamen say they would have to think back a long time to find a story like it.

S.A. GOVERNMENT RUNS OWN HOUSE

Is Not Taking Orders From Delhi or London in Indian Matter.

TACKLING PROBLEM.

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa.—The Government of South Africa is going to tackle the Asiatic problem and is going to see that the authorities are masters in their own house and are not going to be ruled from Calcu[illegible] Delhi or even from London, declared Hon. T. Boydell, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and of Public Works, in a speech here last night.

The minister further declared that the Government was not going to be side-tracked by Dr. A. B. Durrahman, a prominent member of the Indian community of Capetown, who is at the head of a deputation of Indians from South Africa now in India, urging the Government of that country to use its influence to bring about a round-table conference with the South African Government on questions affecting Indians in South Africa in connection with the restrictions placed upon them by the Government of this country.

The deputation recently presented a petition to the Viceroy of India urging recognition of the rights of Indians in South Africa.

In an interview shortly after the arrival of the deputation in India, Dr. A. B. Durrahman said if the Government of India was unable to give help to the Indians in South Africa, they must rouse the self-respect of the people of India who could, and must, force the hands of the British Government to get it to cry "halt" to South Africa in its "cruel and unjust persecution" of Indians in that country.

COLDS THAT DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action, it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchical asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or 'flu.

Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to directions. As your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CANADIAN WINS SPEED SKATING HONORS IN EAST

CROWD OF 20,000.

INDIANS' SHORTSTOP.

Before the opening of the 1925 baseball season E. S. Barnard, head of the Cleveland Americans, made the prediction that Joe Sewell, Cleveland shortstop, would never swing at a ball and miss after there were two strikes on him.

The official battin records of the American League show that Sewell struck out but four times in 1925 and on those four occasions the third strike was called and not natural.

The squat little shortstop of the Clevelands ranks today as the hardest man in the majors to set down on strikes. And still, over a stretch of five pennant campaigns he has struck out two more times than his manager, Tris Speaker. In five years Speaker's strikeout total was 63 to Sewell's 65.

SPEAKER MOST CONSISTENT BATTER IN THE GAME

Speaker appears as the most consistent batsman of them all. The lowest number of strikeouts pitchers scored against him in a single season was 11, the highest 15. His record for five years reads, 12, 11, 15, 13, 12.

Sewell's record is, 16, 20, 12, 13, 4.

In the five-year period neither Sewell nor Speaker totalled as many strikeouts as Babe Ruth did in any season of the 'ast five. Ruth struck out 403 times in the last five years. His lowest total was in 1925 when he struck out 68 times.

SOX RELEASE PITCHER.

Charlie Robertson To St. Louis Browns.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press).—Pitcher Charles Robertson of "perfect game" fame, has been released by the Chicago White Sox to the St. Louis Browns by the waiver route. Robertson, who has been with the White Sox five years, became the fifth pitcher to turn in a no-hit, no run, no-player-reaching-first-base game, when he blanked the Tigers on April 30, 1922.

Tilden To Defend Title Until Wrested From Him

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 2—William T. Tilden, national tennis champion, will not retire from the game until he is defeated; neither will he turn professional.

"I do not approve of champions in any sport retiring undefeated," Tilden said yesterday, "and unless I become physically incapacitated I expect to go on defending my title until some one comes along and wins it away from me."

NO TOP-NOTCH FIGHTERS LEAD WITH RIGHT?

"I recently read that no top-notch fighters lead with their right hands," wri tes Edward Nolan, "and I want to take exception to the statement. Both Lew Tendler and Johnny Wilson lead with the right and while neither is champion each is a topnotcher. I also believe that Mickey Walker and Jack Dempsey lead with either hand and neither is particularly weak in either hand. Harry Greb, I believe, comes in with Walker and Dempsey. It doesn't make much difference to Greb with which hand he leads. I also believe that Dempsey, Walker would achieve better results, espe- and Greb are natural right-handers."

INSIDE Ggolf.

By CHESTER HORTON

Model of 61 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

The quick, speedy movement of the clubhead away from the ball, regardless of the club you are using, robs the player at the very beginning of his stroke, of all possible chance to swing with the club, which is so necessary in the good golf swing. It is not probable that the player will start slowly and jerkily, then slow down to a natural pace. The only way you can insure a smooth-flowing swing throughout is by starting right. I dwell at some length on that phase of the swing because at the very start of the back swing, so to speak, is the back swing as a whole. That is, start right and the swing throughout is likely to be right. A fine practice is to cultivate in the off season thtis easy, graceful, slow start back from the ball.

Inside Sporting Dope

By A. Wise Cracker

Last week, as 1 or 2 of the customers may remember, I said that I hoped to broadcast this Sat. a Peterboro victory at Kitchener. I regret to report I ain't able to do such, and I hope to tell the world I come darn near having to tell the sad tale of a trimming. If the boys hadn't of hit on the happy idea of scoring goals by way of the back-porch instead of through the front door where they had found the welcome on the mat about wore out, those Dutchmen would have been a lap ahead right now. This young Mister Cox started the circular method by going round the net to score, and Mister Bailey said no Collingwooder was going to show up no Bracebridge boy, so he pussyfooted round the Kitchener net so softly that he slipped the rubber in while Mister Karges was pulling his old peak cap a little further down on the old bean, and Mister Klem was looking at his sweetie up in the third row.

Till the Petes made their sprint down the stretch the Wed. night fracas was no gilt-edged exhibition. The Petes acted like a lot of boys away from home the first time, kinda hung round in a bunch for fear they might get lost, and they poked at the puck very gently and generally in the wrong place when Mister Karges had it. And Mister Dwyer was guessing at some of the shots about as bad as some Central League empires guess at balls and strikes. The Kitchener bugs enjoyed it immense, and yr. humble servant wished he'd stayed home—that is till the last period.

Ain't it a grand and glorious feeling when the gang you is pulling for suddenly stop looking like a bunch of decrepit mud-turtles and begin to tear up and down like a prairie fire? I'm here to say when they kicked off the brakes and stepped on the gas Wed. night I made so much noise that two or three guys said something to me in Dutch which, if it was what I think it was, ought to get me something in a libel suit.

The net result of them ninety minutes' hockey was an even brake. If the Petes need that game later on they'll go back and take it; if they don't she'll ride as she is. A draw never did hurt nobody.

HERE COMES CHARLEY.

I suppose you has noticed, Mister Sporting Editor, that the baseball executive is whistling "Clap hands, Here Comes Charley" these days. The reason is that Mister Charley Ansaldo, which shortstopped for the Central Leaguers in the second last year of the reign of King Solomon, is once more getting his letters, if any, from the mail rack in a Peterboro hallway. That is not exactly a nice New Year's greetings for the pitchers round the Central loop, but I believe in hueing to the line no matter where the splinters flies, and so the flingers might just as well know the sad news. Mister Ansaldo, spite of his grand opera name, is what the ball bugs call a sweet fielder, and he has a mean cut when he's up at the plate. And he not only takes his mean cut at the ball, but he generally hits it, which is another thing, for the Petes has had players which took the cut alright, but never did disturb much but the summer breeze. Mister Ansaldo will be as welcome with 1 and all here as a boost in the old pay envelope or a cut in the tax bill.

ADVERTISING PETERBORO.

The Peterboro Hockey Club is not only advertising Peterboro on the ice, but off it. They has had a new box built to house the boys' outfits on the road, and as the contraption was constructed with the idea that it would just nest inside a baggage car and is painted like a circus wagon, it naturally attracts a lot of attention. Unfortunately, when it and a fat baggageman tries to get into the same car at the same time there is caused a bunch of profanity, and they has been things said since that box began its travels that ain't never been heard in railway circles before.

Next Fri. the local fans sees their first Senior O.h.A. game of the season when the Toronto Canoe Club boys is here. The young paddlers has plenty of smoke and pep, and there win in Hamilton should ought to give them plenty of courage, too, and they'll buzz around the Brock street ice palace like a lot of angry hornets. It should ought to be a real nice cup of tea for the Peterboro died in the wools.

I am sorry, Mister Sporting Editor, I won't have no chance to say something about the New Year's Day sporting doings, oweing to the fact that I am writing this dope Thurs. oweing to me expecting to be busy electioneering Fri. At least, if I'm not exactly doing that, I expect a crowded day trying to convince some friends of mine, nice fellows and all that, but dumb, that they ought to mark their X for daylight saving. By the time this is read by the customers, of course, the matter will be decided, and if the daylight savin' is carried you can be sure I win all my arguments.

The City League got away nice Tues. night. The boys put a lotta action into it, and some good young material was seen in the junior serious and a lotta old friends in the senior jams. It looked like a regular season when Mister Jimmy McMartin sailed down the rink and scorched the air with a rifle shot to sew up the pastime. Mister McMartin always packed a dirty heave, and on a swinging target he'd get himself a mess of goals. Goal umpires and spectators in the first row of the balcony is a poor insurance risk when he lets go of the puck.

Tues. night the Pete juniors makes their bow. They'll be a fresh issue, and they is naturally lotta interest as to how the kids will shape up. They should get a good house to welcome them when they clash with these Markham youngsters, cause if the young hopefuls doesn't get no encouragement hockey is going to be in a bad way.

Well, Mister Sporting Editor, I hope you has made lotta good New Year's resolutions, cause the more you make the more chance you has of sticking to one of them. As for me I got onto the way to keeping from breaking resolutions—I ain't made any.

I'm through for now. Next week maybe I'll have some more.

Sportfully yrs.,

A. WISE CRACKER.

CANADIENS' SPEED BEAT PITTSBURGH

SCORE WAS 2-1.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press).—Canadiens subdued Pittsburgh Pirates here last night, 2 to 1. The Frenchmen's speed was bewildering, and, coupled with a fine brand of team work, plus a stone-wall defence, earned them the victory. Joliat, Morenz, Lepine, and Leduc were the attacking agents. The Pirates performed spasmodically and although always dangerous, had to submit to the superior team. In the dying moments of the game numerous attempts to score were smothered by the Flying Frenchmen.

TERRIERS BEAT NIAGARA FALLS

Galt Was on Top By 6-1 Score, and Earned Margin.

GOOD CONDITION.

GALT, Jan. 2. — (Canadian Press). — Excelling in all departments of play and turning in their best game to date in the Big Six group, the Terriers last night trounced Niagara Falls Cataracts 6-1 and deserved to win by this margin. It was the Terriers fine game to end in an hour, and they showed themselves to be a real 60-minute team, never slackening up the pace set at the start, while the boys from the Big Four town were in good condition.

PORT HOPE WON FROM OSHAWA

Defeated Motorists 4-3 on Own Ice—Bowmanville Leading Group.

BEAT COBOURG.

OSHAWA, Jan. 2. — (Canadian Press). — Oshawa Intermediates opened their local O.H.A. schedule at Bradley Arena here last night and ran into a 4-3 defeat, allowing Pete Darch and his Port Hope home brews to carry home a large bundle of New Year's cheer. A. Hill opened the scoring for Port Hope ten minutes after the game got under way. Lott of Oshawa evened up shortly after, but the Hopers again went into the lead, Hutchings bulging the nets near the close of the second period.

Cobourg Intermediates lost to Bowmanville on their own ice sheet last night by 6-1, and the win puts Ginger Edger's crew out in front for the group race with two straight wins.

SHUTOUT SCORED AGAINST OTTAWA

First Time Senators Have Been Held Scoreless.

TORONTO, Jan. 2. Canadian Press. — The Ottawa Senators participated in another shutout game last evening, but this time, and for the first time this season, they were the scoreless team, St. Patrick's defeating the league leaders by 3 goals to nothing, scoring a counter in each period, and on the play the locals deserved an even greater margin in goals.

The Senators failed to show the form expected of the team that has led the procession since the season opened, has scored six shut outs and lost but one in ten games, but the disappointment that this occasioned among the fans was compensated for by the good showing of the locals.

Wheat Prices Swing Up Speculators Are Buying

CHICAGO, Dec. 31.—(Canadian Press.)—Wheat prices took an upward swing to-day after a wavering start. The rise in the market accompanied considerable new buying on the part of speculators who of late have been sellers to realize profits. Liverpool reports of a scarcity of offerings from Argentine were a stumbling factor. The opening, 1 1-4c. lower to 1 3-4c. higher, new style December $1.90 and May $1.79 to $1.79 3-4, was followed by numerous irregular changes in which December touched $1.88 and May $1.82. Corn and oats showed relative weakness as compared fith wheat. Fairly liberal offerings of corn to arrive attracted notice.

WARKWORTH NEWS

WARKWORTH, Dec. 30.—Mr. and Mrs. W. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Edgar and family returned Sunday evening, after spending a few days with relatives at Lonsdale.

Miss Evelyn McVety and Miss Gladys Wood have returned to Toronto after attending the funeral of the former's brother.

Mr. Will Vogt, of Rochester, spent a few days recently with relatives in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Moore and family spent Christmas day with their son, Mr. Will Moore, Meyersburg.

Mrs. W. A. Baker is visiting her sister, Mrs. Jack Bateson, Campbellford.

Mr. Ward Baker, Mr. Marley Barker, Miss Reta Baker and Miss Dorothy West, of Campbellford were in town Friday.

WARKWORTH, Dec. 30.—A Christmas entertainment and Christmas tree was put on Christmas night by St. Paul's Young People's Union, in the Town Hall. The programme was particularly appropriate to the festive season and highly appreciated by the well-filled house. The curtain rose on a platform of the young people of St. Paul's Church. The opening chorus: "Ring the Merry Bells To-day" was very effective as rendered from the young voices. Recitations from younger members of the Union reminded many of the days when they shared the pleasures of a Christmas programme. The story of the Babe of Bethlehem was characterized in the Manger Play. Three fairies watched over the cradle while smaller girls and boys offered their gifts. A very pretty three-part carol "Ring Out the Glad Tidings," varied the programme, and spoke highly of the talent in the Union Church.

The carol, "Silent Night," was pantomimed and added greatly to the beauty of the wonderful words.

A bit of humour was furnished in the Dialogue, "Cats." In the absence of the Professor, the students planned a party in his room. Returning unexpectedly the boys were forced to conceal themselves in the room. The professor decided to spend the night on the couch, so locked the door, put the key in his pocket and retired. The boys, knowing his abhorrence of cats, thought to drive him from the room. A faint meow aroused him and the laughing and clapping of the audience proved their enjoyment in watching the frenzied manner of the professor as he offered all forms of persuasion to eject the family of supposed cats.

One of the prettiest features was a Star Drill. The children were uniformly dressed in blue and silver, each carrying a wand and star. In the success of the drill, Mrs. Jones received a large amount of praise as all changes were enacted by means of chords on the piano. Five smaller children amazed the audience by taking part in the drill and singing their Christmas songs. Even the youngest voice was clearly heard at the rear of the hall.

The Play "Welcome Home Jimmy" was a wonderful success and thoroughly enjoyed by all. Act I. opened in the month of October at Coolbrook Farm, the home of Mrs. Brooks. She and her daughter Lucile rented the farm from the Henderson Sisters doing business through George Pierce, country lawyer and President of the school board. All was excitement preparatory to the return of the prodigal Jimmy Brooks to his blind mother. Another member of the family was Allie Thomas, the pretty school teacher. Two neighbors, 16-year old Peggy Somers and Danny Banks were helpers and friends of the family.

Val Garoner, a wealthy New York lawyer enters to tell Mrs. Brooks her son has been taken to prison charged with theft, and is immediately taken for Jimmy. He and his friend Chesterfield McSwape, seeing the situation, the mother expectant, and trusting to the return of her son to meet the increasing rent, decide, after meeting Lucille and Allie Thomas, to cut the corn crop and work on Jimmy's case. In the meantime Val masquerades as the returned prodigal.

How the two friends cut the corn, aided Mrs. Brooks with her financial troubles proving her lawyer a thief and finally cleared Jimmy Brooks of his unjust charge was brought out in Acts II. and III. Added to these difficulties Val had to pay $500 to stave off his supposed fiance, Melinda Preston, an old maid with a string of campaigns but no conquests to her credit. Then too, Dannie and Allie Thomas complicated matters by discovering Val's iddntity and exposing the error. Three weeks later all was completed. The real Jimmy was restored to his mother's arms and Val Gardiner, and Chesterfield McSwape were fully compensated by Allie and Lucile.

Between acts there was a Ladies' Chorus and a Reading by Miss Clara Parry.

Above is shown a gas well just three miles north of Inglewood, Ontario, where rich supplies of helium have been found.

Theatre

AT THE CAPITOL

"THE SKY RAIDER."

An added attraction to the Capitol Theatre programme for this week-end is the demonstration of the new Charleston given as a solo dance and song by Miss Jessie Hodgson, who appears between intermission of the seven and nine oclock performances. Miss Hodgson, who is an exceptionally clever young dancer, gives a very fine demonstration of the Charleston as danced in solo, with a gay little song as accompaniment. Her performance received enthusiastic applause on Thursday and Friday nights, and will be repeated this evening. It is an excellent opportunity to see the latest thing in the dance line demonstrated skilfully and effectively. Miss Hodgson wears a lovely blue gown for the dance, and her encore is a graceful dance in the toe or "point" work style of dancing that requires a great deal of hard work to bring to perfection and is the test of any dancer's ability.

The Midnight Frolic, which ushered in the New Year at the theatre, was concluded by a wholesale joining in of the audience in a carnival like half hour with much blowing of trumpets and horns, and tossing about of bright colored balloons.

Three acts on their way from Oshawa failed to arrive in time for the Frolic and brought it to a close rather abruptly.

Those taking art in the song and humorous blackface monologue and dialogue programe were Messrs. Norman Laing, Jack Smith, Robert Hendry, Leslie Abraham and Pat Cullen. Monsieur Francois, who is billed for the Capitol Theatre next week, appeared also to make a brief announcement. A picture comedy closed the Frolic programme.

"The Sky Raider," the feature picture for the last three days of this week, is one of those interesting stories that revolve about the romantic difficulties of lovers separated by war and treachery, with a second love story interwoven in its upfolding. The main character, decidedly new to screen audiences, is Captain Charles Nungesser, the worlds greatest living ace, who plays opposite Jacqueline Logan. The thrills which come from a demonstration of remarkable feats performed in the air by daring aviators are intermingled with the love story which has an added interest by reason of the fact that the hero is supposed to be the villain throughout a large portion of the picture.—Jeanette.

FOUND HIS STAR IN SKY.

T. Hayes Hunter Stars France's Flying Hero in Thrilling Air Mail Drama.

T. Hayes Hunter, who brings the great French Ace, Captain Charles Nungesser, to the screen in the Encore picture, "The Sky Raider," showing now at the Capitol Theatre, says that movie stars are not discovered, but made. One discovers the "raw material" and then they must be put through an intensive training process.

Speaking of Captain Nungesser, who is featured with Jacqueline Logan in "The Sky Raider," the director says: "Although the great war hero had no previous dramatic training, he possessed all the primary qualifications for an actor—youth, good looks, a winning personality, a most expressive countenance and, above all else, a liberal equipment of brains.

"It was at a great public demonstration in his honor that I first saw Captain Nungesser—this was an aviation meet at Franklin Field in Philadelphia. After performing many of his hazardous flying stunts for the vast audience of sixty thousand, Captain Nungesser was asked to post for the news photographers. It happened to be talking to the Pathe News cameraman at the time and at once noticed all the above-mentioned characteristics.

"Upon meeting the affable Frenchman I arranged an interview for the following day, at which time I persuaded him to embark upon a picture career. I had a story especially written for him with a most and surrounded him, whom were capable cast, among Walter Law-Gladys Walton, Walter Mc ford Davidson, Wilton Lackaye and others. Captain Nungesser took to the work from the start, and is destined to make his mark as a dramatic actor.

AT THE REGENT

ANN PENNINGTON, JAZZ DANCER, HAS SPLENDID PART IN 'MADAM BEHAVE.'

Leading Magazine pays Warm Tribute to her Talents and Famous Syncopating Knees.

Ann Pennington, who is featured with Julian Eltinge in Al Christie's latest big comedy attraction "Madam Behave," which will be shown at the Regent Theatre next Monday, is without a doubt America's leading dancer and the most popular of the jazz dancing stars who have appeared on the American stage. Here is what Vanity Fair magazine recently had to say of Ann and her famous dimpled syncopating knees:

"And still the dancers come to Broadway. They move uptown in the swift migration from such dance halls as the hurdy gurdies create out of the sidewalks of New York. They sift as far as America in the vast hegira out of hungry Russia. They cluster thick in the dusky swarm which like a rhapsody in brown, has come up out of the lower Mississippi honky tonks and down from the rhythmic cellars of Harlem. But as yet it has been given to none of them to dislodge from our hearts the incredible morsel of mighty versatility known to the census taker as Ann Penington.

"This year she has been playing a lone foot. A generation of poets has sung the dimpled wonder of her knees, but just as Katisha has a left elbow which people would come miles to see, so Miss Pennington's left shoulder when it winks at you across the foot lights, has more deviltry in it than both her dimpled knees put together."

Incidentally it might be said that in "Madam Behave" Miss Pennington plays a real lead, not just a dancing number in which she has been seen in recent pictures.

Not so many years ago she was a picture star and acquitted herself nobly. The supporting players in "Madam Behave" are quite adequate.

GOLF GOSSIP

On a more or less recent trip through Scotland, George W. Greenwood, noted critic of The London Telegraph, discovered what he terms, in an article in Golfing, "a wealth of hidden talent" among the younger generation of golfers. Particularly is this talent to be found among the artisan class, young men who work in the mines, in carpenters' shops, in steel and iron foundries, and in business houses as clerks and warehousemen.

That is a condition that has always obtained in Scotland, where golf is by far and away the national game, where boys of every class start out to play almost as soon as they are able to toddle. It is a condition that does not exist in in America, although we are gradually getting to a point where more and more facilities are being provided for those who are unable to afford memberships in the ordinary clubs. In Scotland, which is a veritable network of golf links, where the fees are nominal, every one has an opportunity to play golf and almost every one does play golf.

Occasionally these so-called artisans step in to claim their own. There was the instance of Willie Hunter, who was unheard of until the British amateur championship of 1921. Hunter was then a clerk in the Deal Postoffice. His father was the golf professional at the Deal Club. He, like the other boys throughout Scotia, had played golf after working hours and, although having attained a high degree of proficiency, was unknown. Obtaining a leave of absence for the week of the championship, he emerged with the title and his career was made. He came to America, made quite a reputation for himself by beating Bobby Jones in the 1921 championship, and is now a professional out on the Pacific Coast.

Play After Working Hours.

It is quite likely that, if some of these "artisan" golfers could spare the time it takes to tune up for and play in the British championship, a number of other Willie Hunters would come into being; for the most part they are contented to play golf after working hours, paying little or no heed to the championship events.

Greenwood makes some interesting comments on his observation of the Scottish golfers belonging to the undiscoverd class. "They are all extraordinarily keen golfers," he says in his article in Golfing "young men who take a great pride in cultivating a correct style. To them style is almost everything, for tradition teaches them that without it they can make no real, lasting progress. And it is a little curious the vast majority of them should adopt, chiefly by instinct, I imagine, the traditional Scottish long, lazy, rhythmical sweeping swing.

Quite a different style, Greenwood points out, from the English method of striking the ball. The Scottish method is more of a sweep, with the "clubhead going through the ball," while the English method is more of a punch as exemplified in the case of Mitchell. Of the two styles, he says, the Scottish is the surer for the average golfer, pointing out that the style of the American is patterned more after it than after the English, method and calling attention to the amazing progress made here as testimony to the soundness of the principles of the Scottish school.

He then cites a few instances of working class golfers who have made impressive showings in tournaments and one of whom, some day, may capture the British championship. There is, he observes, Tom Dobson, the young greenkeeper attached to the championship links of the Honorable Company of Edinburgh Golfers at Muirfield, who recently sprung a surprise by winning the Scottish amateur championship. "He is a player with a typical Scottish swing," says Greenwood. "It is sound and full and with just a dash of abandon in it. He has been handling and swinging golf clubs ever since he was five years old and unconsciously he has built up a style closely resembling the characteristic features of the first-class professional.

Duncan Offers Criticism.

"His attitude toward the ball, the confident way in which he smites it, his rapid judgment of distances and the type of shot required for the occasion are very reminiscent of the professional. And yet he has never seen any of the great men play and has never received any tuition from them. The only hint that was ever supplied was by George Duncan, who happened to be at Gullane one day and saw young Dobson playing. Duncan, quick to notice new and promising material, offered only one criticism and it was that Dobson would achieve better results, especially in the matter of length, if he stood with feet further apart.

"I had noticed that the new Scottish champion stood with feet unusually close together, a method that seemed somewhat to restrict the breadth of the back swing. And all the high hitters agree that one of the chief essentials of long driving is a broad swingback of the club, i.e., the clubhead must be extended outward to its furthest limits. Not that Dobson's swing is in any way cramped, in fact he possesses one of the easiest and most natural styles imaginable.

"Dobson, who plays golf in the intervals of pushing a mowing machine over the Muirfield greens, makes no secret of the fact that he would turn professional if any suitable offer came along. He is just the type of fellow the Americans like to snap up, and it would not greatly surprise me if Dobson crosses the Atlantic to join the army of Scottish artisan players now spread over the vast continent. That his victory in the Scottish championship was no fluke was shown by the fact that in one day he defeated such renowned players as John Caven and Willis Mackenzie, both internationals and members of British Walker Cup teams.

Overlooked Dobson for Team.

"It is rather strange that the selectors of the Scottish international team should hae overlooked Dobson when choosing the side. Although absolutely unknown in England, he was not living in obscurity in his own country, for on the east side, at any rate, he has been in the public eyes for a year or two. All over Scotland there are numbers of golfers like Dobson who need only opportunity and encouragement to bring them into the very front rank The Scottish authorities have a virgin field of splendid promise to operate in, and now that Dobson has been "discovered" they may be prompted to develop the work of exploration.

"St. Andrews itself is full of the Dobson type—men working in various capacities in the club-making industry, and in joiners' and carpenters' shops. For example, there are T. Duncan, winner of the Telegraph Cup; T. F. Currie, a booking-clerk, son of the late St. Andrews station master; Laurence Auchterlonie, a son of Willie Auchterlonie, one-time open champion, and W. Foulis, a local postman. All four are first-class golfers, who only require experience in the big events to enable them to do proper justice to their natural golfing abilties.

The case of Auchterlonie supplies a clear illustraton of the need for experience to bring out and develop a player's natural abilties. He is a tall young man of about 23 years of age, who knows almost everything there is to know about the art of clubmaking, and a very great deal about shot production. He possesses an enormous pair of hands, similar to those of Harry Vardon, and they wrap around the club shaft in so comforting an embrace that it would appear that nothing could disturb the enveloping grip. As regards actual style, there is little that the expert can find fault with, but, curiously enough, he cannot do himself justice in the big open events when other things count besides the golf stroke.

"His temperament is such that, in the language of the race course, he seems unable to 'stay the course.' When the crisis comes just toward the finish he becomes frightened of himself. His methods are then very slipshod and careless, and in colloquial phraseology he 'cracks.' Yet in club competitions he can go around the old course at St. Andrews from the championship teeing grounds in 71, 72, 73 and 74 with splendid regularity. He requires the finishing touch of 'experience'; he is like the singer who performs admirably in private, but when it comes to the Albert Hall he is written down either as commonplace or a failure.

"Tom Duncan is a neat little player with a professional touch in all his shots, and excels with the irons. And as for Foulis, the local postman, if he did not bring round the letters four times a day he might be a golfer of note. As it is he is the champion of St. Andrews, no mean thing in a community where everybody plays golf, and where plus and scratch men are as thick as blackberries in Summer time. I often wonder whether the Scottish authorities ever give a thought to this type of golfer when considering the selection of international teams. It is not at all unlikely that some surprising discoveries would be made; in any event, none is likely to forsake golf for lawn tennis because the game does not provide either sufficient mental and physical exercise."

WATCH THE KIDNEYS

Fatigue and that tired feeling is the result of poison in the blood. When the kidneys fail to remove this poison from the system it leads to backache, rheumatic pains and sometimes to that fatal ailment known as Bright's disease. When this condition exists, don't delay, go to your druggist and get a box of Dr. Banta's Kidney and Rheumatic Pills and they will quickly correct the cause of your trouble.

Mr. Arthur Pinch of Smith Township states that Dr. Banta's Kidney and Rheumatic Pills give him more speedy relief than any other preparation that he had tried.

MANY RUMORS OF REASON FOR CAROL'S ACTION

Belgrade Report Says He Would Marry a Jewess.

POLITICAL COUP?

Said to Plan Rebellion Against His Father and Premier Bratiami.

LONDON, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press)—A despatch to the Daily Express from Belgrade, Serbia, says one report of why Carol renounced the throne is that he desires to marry again, this time a "Jewess" and first must obtain a divorce from Princess Helen. The despatch adds that in his letter to King Ferdinand, Carol gave an undertaking not to return to Rumania for six years.

Planning Rebellion?

BUCHAREST, Jan. 2 (United Press)—Rumors were current here today that Crown Prince Carol intended, after using his renunciation as evidence of "martyrdom", by the Bratianu regime, to start a coup of his own. If he succeeds in winning sufficient support for the martyrdom idea, it is claimed that he will set up his own government, ousting his aged father, King Ferdinand, the peasants are reported taking an increasingly unfavorable attitude toward the Bratianu government, while Carol himself is bitterly opposed to Bratianu and at outs with the beautiful Queen Marie and King Ferdinand.

It is further reoprted that in renouncing his throne rights, Carol demanded a large money allowance and a divorce from Princess Helen whom he is reported never really to have loved.

Period of Grace.

BUCHAREST, Jan. 2 — (United Press).—A week-end period of grace in which he could reconsider his renunciation of his Royal succession rights was reported to-day to have been granted Crown Prince Carol.

The Privy Council has been ordered by King Ferdinand to promulgate a decree Monday, declaring Carol's four-year-old son, Michi (Michael), legal successor to the throne on the King's death, and the Parliament has been summoned to act thereon.

But at the same time it is understood the Prince can change his mind before Monday and resume his right to succeed later to the throne and to remain in the Royal Family.

While reports to-day still claimed that the Crown Prince's spectacular step had been taken out of love for his morganatic wife, the vivacious Zizi Lambruni, other versions claimed that politics play a heavy role in the renunciation.

Queen is Grieved.

ROME, Jan. 2 (United Press).—Former Queen Olga of Greece, grandmother of Prince Carol's wife, told the United Press to-day she doubted that there would be any divorce of the couple.

"I am full of grief at the news about Carol," she said.

Agitation, Peril and Misfortune Prophesied For 1926

Prophetess Sees Famous Men Die and Militarism Revive

PARIS, Jan. 2 (Canadian Press.—A year of agitation, peril and misfortune is beginning for the world in general, according to the dismal predictions of Mme. Deux Thebes, who picked up the mantle of the prophetess and draped herself with it when the famous Mme. De Thebes died.

She sees death taking a great French soldier and a famous French politician. She discerns a terrible sea disaster in which one of the best-known persons in America will lose his life. Internal difficulties, too, will disturb the United States. She also has a vision of brightly lit cafes in New York and glasses bubbling with champagne, which makes her say that prohibition is coming to an end this year.

Militarism will reawaken in Germany, according to Thebes, with troops moving both to the east and the west, causing the world to tremble. For England the prophetess sees a crack in all parts of the Empire and torrents of blood flowing around the holy places of India. Almost the only bright spot in her picture is Russia, which she says will free herself from the yoke of the Bolsheviki, thanks to a saviour rising from the people.

QUEBEC LIMITS LET WITH CONDITIONS

Bidders Must Erect Mills and Make Paper in the Province.

QUEBEC, January 2.— Canadian Press.— Adopting a new policy destined to encourage the manufacturing of news print within the limits of the province, the Quebec government, in an official communique, giving out information regarding the leasing by auction of some 5000 square miles of timber limits, states that a special clause is included in the conditions of leasing by which timber cut in the area affected must be manuufactured in this province and at least two newsprint mills must be erected within three years by the successful bidders.

In one case the mill will be located on the Quebec side of the Ottawa river with a minimum outpout of 450 tons of newsprint daily, and in the other case a mill with a capacity of 200 tons daily must be built in the Lake St. John district, which will necessitate the extension of the Canadian National Railways lines around Lake St. John.

MUSICIANS OF MERIT AT CHURCH CONCERT

Nina Gale and Leo Smith, of Toronto, Engaged For Trinity Recital

On Monday night, January 11th, Trinity Church is holding the annual anniversary concert. The artists engaged for the occasion are Nina Gale, concert and oratorio soprano, and Leo Smith, 'cellist, both of Toronto. Mr. Smith is well-known to Peterboro music-lovers, but Miss Gale is a comparatively new-comer. Press notices of previous performances by her include the following:

"She is a singer of commanding personality — her voice is a pure dramatic soprano—she shows herself an artiste of unusual distinction in a variety of schools." — Hector Charlesworth in "Saturday Night," Toronto.

"Miss Gale has a superb mezzo soprano voice of almost contralto quality and soprano range. She sings with fine experience, authority and charm. Her lyric sense is very high and she dramatizes well." — Augustus Bridle in "The Daily Star," Toronto.

"Her rich, dark-hued, mezzo soprano notes have a luscious melting quality. It is the artistry of everything done by Miss Gale that gives her a high place among our native musicians."—Fred Jacob in "The Mail and Empire," Toronto.

A rare treat of exceptional musical talent is in store for the music-lovers of Peterboro.

ENNISMORE NOMINATIONS.

We little thought his death so near.

OUR STUDENTS SUCCEED

We have many letters from grateful students who have been placed in profitable positions after graduating from our School.

The following passages have been taken from letters received recently from ex-students:

1.—"I have been with this firm only a week, and so far like the work real well. I am receiving a salary of $1.080 a year. This I consider very good when you consider my inexperience."

2.—"My sister and I want to thank you very much indeed for your interest in us, for it was through your efforts that we received our positions. The manager was very nice, and took us over and introduced us to the lady at the Employment desk. My sister was sent to a position that day, and I received mine the day following."

3.—"Just a few lines to let you know that I have a position with the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. of Akron, Ohio. There seems to be quite a demand for male stenographers over here. A fellow just out of school can make anywhere from $100 to $125 a month to start. I am getting $125. Not so bad for a beginner."

4.—"I also wish to say that I appreciate very much the value of the training given in your College."

Space will not permit or we could go on almost indefinitely with such passages. We are interested in our students while in the school and afterwards until they are suitably placed.

PARENTS—Get particulars about our training NOW. Have your boy or girl start Monday, Jan. 4th, the opening of our Winter Term.

DOWAGER QUEEN MARGHERITA OF ITALY DIED TO-DAY AFTER ILLNESS OF SEVERAL WEEKS

Mother of King Victoria Emmanuel Was in 75th Year.

KNOWN FOR KINDNESS.

BORDINGHARIE, Italy, Jan. 4.—Dowager Queen Margherita, mother of King Victor Emmanuel, died today in her 75th year. She had been ill of pulmonary pleurisy for several weeks.

Queen Margherita throughout her life aided philanthropic institutions, and was ever ready to help persons in want. She was born in Turin, Nov 20, 1851, the daughter of Prince Ferdinand of Savoy, Duke of Genoa, and of Princess Elizabeth of Saxe. She was married at 17 to Prince Humbert of Piedmont, who ten years later at the death of his father, Victor Emmanuel 2nd, became King of Italy. She had only one child, the present King, who ascended the throne when his father was assassinated July 29, 1900.

MINERS RAIDED STORES, TAKING FOOD SUPPLIES

Had Been in Want For Some Time, Due to Lack of Work.

ONE STORE BURNED.

Followed Meeting To Consider Answer of Government to Request For Aid.

GLACE BAY, N.S., Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—The situation among the coal miners of Glace Bay and New Aberdeen, where the absence of steady employment in colleries No. 2 and No. 4 of the British Empire Steel Corporation has resulted in a great deal of want, affecting practically the entire community, culminated last night in raids made upon several provision stores by the unemployed and the loss to the storekeepers of considerable stock and the burning of a store at New Aberdeen. The raids followed mass meetings called by the United Mine Workers of America to consider any replies that may have been made by the Government of Nova Scotia to the resolution adopted by a meeting of the miners last Sunday, in which the men called upon the Government to come to their relief and declared that if relief was not forthcoming they would "be forced to take what we need wherever we can find it."

MOOSE JAW GARAGE MAN CLAIMS TITLE

Says He is Heir To Earldom of Granville.

MOOSE JAW, Sask., Jan. 4. — G. B. Bower, a mechanic in an automobile garage in Assiniboia, Sask., declares that he is the heir to the estates and title of Earl of Granville and Baron Levenson of Stone.

Gower's first knowledge of the fact that he was being searched for in Western Canada and in practically every country in the world was contained in a Canadian Press despatch of December 5 last.

"I saw the news item and cabled at once," said Mr. Gower, "and I am waiting for word. I don't think there will be much for me. You see, my sister, who lives in Sheffield, England, was willed the cash by my uncle and I the estate. I was born and raised in Sheffield, saw nearly two years' service in the European war, part of which was in the aviation corps.

He has been a resident of Assiniboia for three years.

Mr. Gower was married on Dec. 16 at Assiniboia to Miss Hilda Hall, of Regina.

Chatham Woman To Recover From Effects Of Poison

CHATHAM, Ont., Jan. 4. — Mrs. Jeptha Peers left St. Joseph's Hospital Saturday for her home on Edgar street when physicians announced that she will completely recover from the poison effects of bi-choride of mercury. Monday last the woman took a tablet of this slow poison in mistake for a medicinal pill. She never lost consciousness.

Frank Millar who was found frozen and unconscious in a building at Vosberg last Monday morning and who was thought to be near death is also recovering.

Love Letter In Bouquet Thrown To Prince Carol

BUDAPEST, Jan. 4.—(Canadian Press.)—It was for love of a beautiful Rumanian woman, so it is learned here, that Crown Prince Carol renounced his rights to the throne. The Prince, who visited Paris and London with the woman, said to be the wife of a major, was warned by the Bucharest government to leave her, but replied that he would rather renounce the throne.

While with her in Paris, he was visited by the Court Chamberlain, Gen Angelesco, who remonstrated with him and employed every argument, but failed to shake the Prince in his resolve.

It is related that the woman first drew the attention of the Crown Prince to herself by throwing a superb bouquet in which was concealed a love letter, in Carol's passing automobile. The account received here of the meeting of the Crown Council at Bucharest, describes King Ferdinand as sobbing alond as he read his son's letter of renunciation.

OTTAWA, January 4. — Canadian Press. — Denial was made this morning by Robert Gardiner, Progressive member for Acadia, Alta., that he was slated to enter Premier Mac-Kenzie King's cabinet as Minister of Immigration and Colonization.

Until 1848, when the first gutta percha balls appeared, golf balls were made of leather and stuffed with feathers.

Clergy and Royalty Give Official Approval To Dictum On Clothing Worn By Italian Women

ROME, Jan. 4 (United Press)—Aristrocratic and well-to-do Italian women must not be dressed like "vaudeville stars, Parisian actresses and movie beauties."

This dictum from Baroness Russi Ruggi, vice president of the Catholic Women's Union, has the official stamp of approval of Queen Helen of Italy, Pope Pius XI, Cardinal Merry Del Val, Protector of the Union, and Cardinal Pompili, Vicar of Rome.

Baroness Russi Ruggi told the United Press in an exclusive interview that the Vatican and Cardinal Pompili, who, as chief of the vicariate, directly communicates the pope's ideas, are more than ever set against the follies of the prevailing feminine fashions such as abbreviated skirts, flesh colored stockings, bare arms and low necks.

Mother-in-Law Stands up For Carol Defending His Reputation in Past

ROME, Jan. 4 (Special to The Examiner by United Press) (Copyright 1926)—Prince Carol's royal mother-in-law has spoken to clear his name of the charge of unfaithfulness in the past although she cannot say as much for the present.

From her home in Florence, Queen Sophie, mother of Princess Helen E., whom Carol has deserted, consented to a telephonic interview with United Press, probably the first such interview ever granted by a member of European royalty. The queen had good words to say of Carol's past performances. Queen Sophie is the widow of the ill-fated former King Constantine of Greece, who was driven from the throne by the Allies, and returned to it on a plebiscite of his people only to die in exile in another dethronement.

"I am just ready to leave for Bucharest, where my duty as a mother calls me to be near my daughter in this so supreme criticial moment," said the Queen.

(Subsequently Queen Sophie determined not to go to Bucharest, Dowager Queen Olga and Prince Christopher being delegated in her stead.)

"I can't tell you how the news" (Carol's renunciation of the Rumania throne and desertion of his wife and boy) "overcame me. I would like to believe it all was not true."

In five years of married life Carol always was an exemplary husband and father who adored his little son.

"When I saw him last he was talking of the pleasure he would have in staying with me and my daughters, Irene and Catherine, here in Florence, where he was to come with Helen

"What has happened I cannot tell," continued the Queen, "I don't know how to explain it. I refuse to pass any judgment on what has happened and I cannot understand it. It is so incredibale. I know that my daughter must suffer and that the King and Queen of Roumania are offering her their parental affection and comfort. She now awaits me."

Female Tennis Players Are Officially "Women"

LONDON, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press.) — "Ladies still play golf in England, but on the tennis courts feminine players in the future are to be known as "women."

By a decree of the British Lawn Tennis Association, the ruling authority, "women" players, a term long taboo, has been restored and the word "ladies" takes its place along the discarded expressions.

The word "Charlady" is taken quite too seriously in some quarters, tennis officials believed, and the decision to restore "women" as players was taken with the view of starting a move for the return of a word which had nearly disappeared in connection with amateur sports in England.

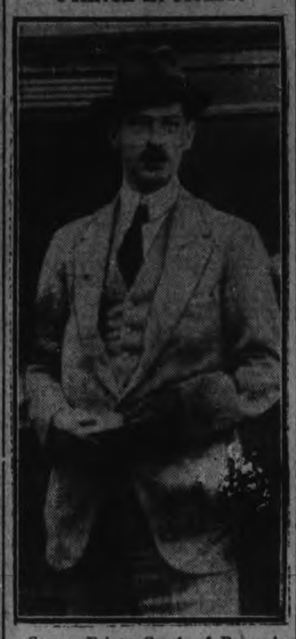
CROWN PRINCE CAROL MENTIONED IN RUMORS OF PROPOSED MILITARY COUP TO OVERTHROW GOVERNMENT

PRINCE IN ITALY.



Crown Prince Carol, of Rumania, whose abdication as heir to the throne is still shrouded in mystery It is reported he will be divorced from his wife.

Reports That Abdication Was Result of Plotting Against Ministry.

STILL IN ITALY

Divorce From Princess Helen of Greece Expected to Be Next Development.

LONDON, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press.)— The Vienna correspondent of the Westminster Gazette learns that the military leaders in Bucharest have been planning a coup d'etat to overthrow the Bratiano ministry and establish a military dictatorship, but retaining King Ferdinand as ruler of Rumania.

The correspondent says that the connection of this scheme with Crown Prince Carol's renunciation is obscure, but that it is hinted that the plot and Carol's action are cause and effect, for it is known that Carol's reunciation was forced upon him.

STORIES DISAGREE.

VIENNA, Jan. 4.—The Opposition leaders of the Rumanian Parliament are reported to have asked the King of Rumania during a Crown council to make an attempt to persuade Crown Prince Carol not to abdicate, which Ferdinand refused, saying it was useless to try to change his son's mind. The failure of the Cabinet to make a similar request is explained on the ground that the Ministers knew it was hopeless in view of Carol's haadstrong temperament.

This admission and explanation contrast strangely with strenuous Government denials that Carol was forced to resign either because he was badly compromised in the aircraft scandal or because he was playing politics and intriguing with the Opposition against the King. The Opposition knows Carol's temperament as well as the King and Cabinet, and it is no secret that Carol has been flirting with the minority parties sufficiently to justify their taking the step they did in his behalf.

Scandal Aired as a Club.

Indeed, according to the latest rumor, the King and Queen and Premier Bratiano — who was on hostile terms with Carol—are said to have aired the scandal as a club to force abdication, because Carol was secretly plotting with the Opposition elements, especially the Fascisti, to carry out a revolution next spring on the Mussolini model against the King and Cabinet.

Despite denials—which some find "protest too much"— the impression is growing that Carol's abdication was not voluntary; that it was closely connected with the aircraft scandal and the political role he was playing and every attempt is being made to suppress the real situation.

From a reliable source it is learned that the King and Government are making a strong effort to persuade Carol to hold his tongue and take up his residence in some distant country, preferably Scandinavian— "some tranquil country which has no interest in making political capital against Rumania out of Carol's situation." Large sums are believed to have been offered him for this purpose. It is thought that it is easier to persuade him, as by abdication appanage—his chief source of income—while what little personal property he has is controlled by the Government.

Carol is now said to be in Italy, and the attempt to have him leave the land of the Black Shirts fits in with the rumor that a Fascist coup is plotted in Rumania.

Love Affair, the Official Version.

According to the official version the only reason for Carol's abdication was of a "personal nature—a love affair."

The romantic version, which naturally is the favorite here, is based on these facts:

Carol, during the war, fell in love and maried Zizi Lambrino, the daughter of a Rumanian officer, and reputed to be one of the prettiest girls in Bucharest. The royal family finally succeeded in getting the marriage nullified in 1920, providing the bride with handsome compensation, and married Carol the following year to Princess Helen of Greece. Carol, however, never really abandoned his first wife, with whom he has had three children, who of course do not enjoy royal

GREEK GOVERNMENT PROCLAIMS PREMIER PANGALOS AS DICTATOR

Premier Announces Reasons For His Assumption of Power.

NO UNDERSTANDING.

Government Can't Agree With Party Leaders—Takes Responsibility.

By Anthony Papaynnakis
(United Press Staff Correspondent).

ATHENS, Jan. 4.—Greece to-day is under the rule of a dictatorship. Premier Pangalos has proclaimed himself dictator and had indefinitely postponed the Senatorial elections.

EXPLAINS STEP.

ATHENS, Greece, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—Premier Pangalos, in a statement to the press this morning, explained his assumption of dictatorial powers announced yesterday. The statement said that the Government, convinced that there was no hope of reaching an understanding with the party leaders, owing to their intransigeance, had decided to concentrate all the power in its hands and assume the responsibility for further development of the political situation. The Premier said he must act in accordance with the demands of that large majority on which the Government had relied and would continue to rely. Therefore the Government, or rather, he himself, considered it was no longer bound by any previous declaration or obligation.

GREEK FORCES STRONG.

LONDON, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press)—A Budapest despatch to the Express from Athens quotes Premier Pangalos as saying, during his speech at dinner: "Our fleet in a few months will be mistress of the Eastern Mediterranean, and our army one of the strongest in the Balkans."

Murder Suicide Tragedy Survivors Are Married

NEW YORK, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—A romance that began last March when Mrs. William J. Dempsey and Robert Noonan were discovered shot to death in an apparent murder-suicide affair, culminated yesterday in the marriage of William J. Dempsey and Mrs. Robert Noonan, who made each other's acquaintance when the tragedy was revealed.

LARGE AREAS STILL FLOODED

Epidemic Adds To Terrors in Belgium—Many Are in Transylvania.

RHINE SUBSIDING.

LONDON, Jan. 4 (United Press). —Flood waters to-day still brought suffering to a large area of Europe. Epidemic threatened in Belgium to add to the terrors of the swollen rivers. Further east, in Transylvania, the horror of the floods became ever more striking, with reports that children, aged and infirm were dying from exposure.

The Rhine torrents were reported subsiding, but in Holland, France, Belgium and England high water was still prevalent.

THOUSAND PERISH.

LONDON, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press).—A Budapest despatch tu the Daily Mail estimates that more than one thousand persons have perished in the floods of Transylvania. No details have been received.

THE WEATHER.

"Oh, what a difference a few days make!" A week ago Sunday a blast from the Arctic regions sent the thermometer down to 26 below zero. This Sunday the temperature hovered around 30 degrees all day, and a little lower in the early morning. Highest 30 degrees; lowest 24. Mild conditions prevail nearly everywhere. — W. P.

In Kashmir, where the temperature is often as low as twenty degrees below zero, the poorer people keep themselves warm by carrying a bowl full of hot embers under their one and only garment.

Verdict of the People Favors Action to Collect Says R. R. Hall

The verdict of the electors on "Black Friday" can only be considered as being a condemnation of the course that has been taken by the Public Utilities Commission in not collecting the $20,000.00 claim against the Campbell Milling Co.

The only way, Commissioners Mason and Bradburn may regain the confidence they have lost and Commissioner Matthews may retain, the confidence he has won, is to make an honest attempt in the Courts to collect this claim, even though some ugly facts may leap to light which bring the blush of shame.

The unseemly delay of the Commissioners which has been so justly condemned by the taxpayers has already prejudiced the city's claim to the extent of $5,000.00 a year and hereafter will prejudice it to the extent of $500.00 per month. The time to act is at once, and that act requires the Commissioners to immediately issue a writ bringing the case before the Court at a public trial at Peterborough where the fierce light breaks in and "blackens every blot."

I will undertake free of charge to the taxpayers of this city, to furnish the names of witnesses to prove the following facts:

That prior to 1919, the Company had installed motors to deliver 300 horsepower to operate its plant and that it was on a flat rate for 315 horsepower and its flour mill had a capacity of 750 barrels of flour per day.

That during the years 1919, 1920 and 1921 this mill was operated every month to its full capacity and required its installed motor capacity of 200 horse power to operate it, plus 100 horsepower installed to operate its feed plant and unloading facilities, making in all 300 horse power. But during these three years the company only paid for about 150 horsepower each year.

The rotten excuse is offered that roller bearings were used to enable the company to produce these wonderful results, but the fact is that since an honest meter has been correctly installed there the company has been forced to pay for oevr 400 horse power to operate its mill.

The contract between the Commission and the company expressly provides that "in no case will the monthly bill be less than the cost to the municipality," and the cost to this city is $22.50 per horse power, and that the "service charge will be based on the connected load" and the connected load was 300 horse power whereas the comapny did not pay for one half the power it consumed.

The meter it is claimed was tested. When tested it was improperly instaled. When it was measuring power it was not properly installed. I will produce witnesses free of charge for my services to show that meters have been installed, that registered only one quarter of the power consumed, and such is this one; and I will produce witnesses to show that tricky meters have been installed that showed more power used when much less was consumed. That fact will be proved by manufacturers living right in this very city of Peterborough.

It is impossible in a short article to disclose the many facts to establish a claim but enough is shown for the taxpayers to ask the question, "To what issue will this come?" and for the ordinary taxpayer to answer: "Something is rotten in the state of Denmark." For the good name of Peterborough it is to be hoped that in the prosecution of an honest claim such names as Mason, Bradburn and Matthews, will not go down unwept, unhonored and unsung.

Mr. Gordon S. Matthews has not declared himself one way or the other, but the time has come when he must declare himself one way or the other.

The fortunes of war are in the hands of Mr. G. S. Matthews. It depends upon his ability to do the right. But he cannot do this wrong and see Pterborough defrauded out of its just rights.

January 4, 1926. R. R. HALL.

NEW SEWAGE LINE.

Work Nearly Completed on West Bank of the Otonabee.

The first link in the new sewage line along the west bank of the Otonabee is nearing completion, as nearly all the pipes have been laid to connect the Quaker Oats plant. The Canadian Pacific, Hydro-Electric, Peterborough Cereal and the pumping station must be completed before the unit is ready for service. According to a statement from City Engineer Parsons, the project will be finished before spring.

Mr. Parsons said that the largest single construction for the coming year would be the installing of storm drains which in many places were essential.

MANY NEW MEMBERS COMING. FOR PARLIAMENTARY OPENING

One Hundred and Ten Have Never Sat in House Before.

SOME OLD-TIMERS.

Famous Figures of Years Ago Return After Absences.

OTTAWA, Jan. 4 — (Canadian Press).—The new Parliament will see nearly as many new faces as old ones. When the members file into their seats on Thursday afternoon about 110 of them will have taken the oath of Parliament for the first time. Eight or ten more will be returning to Parliament after years of absence. Of those who sat in the last Parliament, which had 235 members, about 125 were again returned in the October elections. The House will see again some interesting and familiar faces, Hon. Robt. Rogers, Hon. R. B. Bennett, Sir Geo. Perley, Henri Bourassa, Hon. J. W. Edwards, Dr. J. L. Chabot of Ottawa, Peter McGibbon, Muskoka, and De Witt Foster of Hants-Kings, N.S. Most of them were members of the wartime Parliament.

The members are beginning to arrive and gossip begins to hum about the capital. Most of it is sheer speculation, the line-up in the House being so indecisive. "Anything may happen" seems to be the general comment.

The Cabinet meets this afternoon in full council. Caucuses by the political parties will no doubt take place within a few days.

Barking dogs which become a nuisance can now be "cured" by having their barks removed, as a result of experiments carried out by the American Veterinary Medical Association.

Tillsonburg Claims Palm For Collection Of Taxes

TILLSONBURG, Ont., Jan. 4.—(Canadian Press).—Tax Collector Twiss of Tillsonburg takes exception to the statement that Rigby, N.S., holds the Canadian record for collection of 1925 taxes with 98 per cent and claims the honor for his municipality. Out of a total collectable taxes of $80,536.25 the sum of $80,031.99.0 r 99 3-5 per cent was collected before the end of the year. This does not include taxes levied during 1924 and paid during the past year or taxes due in 1925 paid since the beginning of the new year. Mr. Twiss states that there is every indication that the tax collection percentage in 1926 will reach the maximum.

FIRE ALARM SIREN USHERED NEW YEAR

Midnight Communion and Ringing of Church Bells Greeted 1926.

LAKEFIELD, Jan. 4.—Midnight communion was celebrated in St. John's church on Thursday night with a good attendance present; the service was fully choral. Rev. Walter Cox delivered a brief address on "The Signs of the Times." The ringing of the church bell and the sounding of the siren fire alarm ushered in 1926 with the congregation kneeling in silent prayer. Afterward the service proceeded and a large number made their New Year's communion.

SAFE CRACKERS' EFFORTS FUTILE

Very Small Sum Found After Labors in Opening Heavy Safe.

CONTAINED BOOKS.

TORONTO, January 4. Canadian Press. — Safe crackers entered the office of the Lawlor Bread Company, about 5.40 on Sunday morning, inserted a quantity of nitro-glycerine into the safe, touched a fuse, and blew the heavy steel door almost off its hinges. A portion of the inner door was also torn away.

This is the second onslaugh; made on the safe of this company within two months, the previous attack yielding but a slight return to the robbers. The cracksmen's labors yesterday were but poorly rewarded, as only a small amount of cash l d:een placed in the receptacle. Its contents consisted mostly of books used in the office. No arrests made.

STRANGER THAN FICTION

BEHIND THE ROYAL VEIL.

(By S T. Williamson.)

Between Europe's two greatest military powers—a vast semi-Oriental empire and a kingdom misruled from a court glittering with the graces of civilization, but sordid with intrigue and disregard of weaker fellow-countrymen—lay a country that, once a duchy, had had the impudence to declare itself a kingdom. A court established in ponderous imitation of the fripperies of quicker-witted peoples was ruled by a soldier King who had no sympathy with the expenditure of State funds upon satins and brocades, upon literature, art and architecture.

This was a ridiculous situation to pert observers from more cultured lands; but their jests were seldom tinged with contempt, for the monarch of the upstart country increased his army from 35,000 to 84,000 men and made it the third most powerful in Europe. Into this army he instilled a discipline of a sort that was to take nearly two centuried to break.

The palace guard was a regiment of giants. The King had agents in almost every country to bribe or kidnap the tallest men they could find. Priests who conformed to specifications were dragged from their altars; even petty nobles of mammoth proportions were not safe from seizure. Giants though they were, the members of this regiment were thoroughly cowed, and obeyed with an ape-like fidelity; they stood motionless when their royal master inspected them and savagely caned any soldier whose equipment showed the slightest trace of neglect.

Others besides these giant guardsmen were unmercifully beaten by the drillmaster King, and particularly by the Crown Prince, whose childhood was a nightmare. The monarch had thrashed his kingdom into good order; he sought by the same means to educate his son and successor. Any boy of less spirit would have been broken; but the King's failure to bend his son to his will enriched history and enslaved nations. What was drudgery to other students, once it was forbidden, became enjoyment to the Crown Prince. Latin was one subject not to be taught the royal pupil; and since it was officially denied him, the boy stole time from an unbelievably full schedule of instruction to master a language that is the average schoolboy's despair. Other prescribed subjects he investigated and enjoyed—music, poetry, philosophy and elements of military strategy that monarchs generally left to their Generals. The King, with the tastes of a sergeant major, little knew that these forbidden pursuits were to make a man whose name is still great in history.

In efforts to maintain his palace guard at the highest stature, the King frequently experimented with eugenics. Peasant girls of Junoesque proportions were abducted by royal agents and forcibly married to giant palace sentries.

With no more say in the matter than a mere guardsman might have, the Crown Prince became engaged to a Princess. Her relations and ladies-in-waiting spoke approvingly of her amenable disposition and satisfactory complexion, then hinted at a figure improved with padding and teeth blackened by neglect. A royal marriage was solemnized; formal sentiments of congratulation that nobody meant were spoken, and the Crown Prince took his bride to a garrison town where his regiment was stationed. Then he respectfully left her alone.

Other matters engaged his attention—military studies, music and a voluminous exchange of letters with one of the greatest liberal thinkers of the time. Naturally, the affairs of the Crown Prince's household were a subject for gossip at the capital and among intimates of the King. Scandal was spread, but nothing definite was known; for the heir to the throne had taken great pains in selecting members of his suite. One requirement was that his secretaries should not be married. The Crown Prince would not trust married men to keep secrets from their wives. And then, one day, his secret Chamberlain introduced to him his sister-in-law.

The old drillmaster King was succeeded by the Crown Prince, a young man with a mind of his own, well versed now in the theory of government and of proved military leadership. The new Queen was installed in the royal palace with a suitable following. The Court was revived and enlarged, and the young woman whom the King had met in the garrison town moved with her two children to the palace, where she was known as the widow of the secret Chamberlain's brother.

The King announced that in addition to being ruler of a nation he was the first servant of his people. Former restrictions were lifted. New laws were promulgated, new taxes levied, new armies raised, new wars fought.

The capital grew rich with spoils. A victorious King made generous grants to his followers, including large sums to his secret Chamberlain. As time went on the King spent more and more time at the wars, and the young woman with the two children grew restive. In the meantime it was discovered that the secret Chamberlain's brother had another widow, but some suspicious tongues were silenced by the report that she was a second wife, married after a divorce from the first.

Also, as time went on, the King made larger and larger grants of money to his secret Chamberlain—to the apparent jealousy of the brother's first wife. One day the second wife died. Circumstances were suspicious, but there were no clues. A year later the secret Chamberlain died. The now no longer young woman with the two children produced a will, signed by the secret Chamberlain, whereby she inherited all the property accumulated through the King's bounty. The dead man's son was cut off without a copper.

Upon his return from a campaign the generous King was shocked to hear of the disinheritance of the son of his faithful follower, but he dared not order an investigation lest it should uncover an affair embarrassing to the first servant of his people.

This affair is the basis of a claim involving an estate valued at $37,000,000 that is now being tried in Germany's highest court. The claimant is Arno von Fredersdorff, great-great-grand-nephew of Michael Gabriel von Fredersdorff, secret Chamberlain of Frederick the Great. Defendants are descendants of Marie Elizabeth Daum, who, it is alleged, was the King's mistress, and who came into possession of the Fredersdorff properly through the use of poison and the falsification of a will. The claimant's family lost suit after suit for the estate in the Prussion courts, until a document was discovered which purported to be Mlle. Daum's confession.

SCHOOL SECTIONS PROTEST CHANGE

Two at Burnbrae Object To Township Trustee Boards.

BURNBRAE, Jan. 4. — The annual meetings of School Sections Nos. 1 and 11 were held on Wednesday last, and one of the chief items of discussion was the proposed new trustee plan. This would mean that ten men would be appointed as trustees for the township and be paid at the same rate as councillors, doing away altogether with the present system of trustee boards at each section. Considerable discussion took place at the recent nomination meeting in Campbellford concerning this matter, and each section was advised to take some action. The ratepayers of S.S. No. 1 instructed their secretary to forward a protest against the passing of this bill at the coming session, while a committee was appointed at S.S. No. 11 to draw up a similar protest to be sent to the Minister of Education. The trustees for the year are at No. 1: Garnet Lloyd, J. A. Murray, Jesse Locke; at No. 11: Percy Oddie, Chas. Hutcheon, George Ingram.

A very successful shooting match was held on the farm of Mr. Fred. Hay on New Year's afternoon. Geese and ducks were the prizes. Although only one range was used the competition proved keen, and the rounds were shot off rapidly. Messrs. Claude and Harry Hoard, Thos. Fry and Joe Holloday were among the winners.

Stanley Little, son of Mr. W. W. Little, is receiving congratulations on being accepted as cheesemaker for the 1926 season by the directors of New Model Factory, West Seymour. Stanley comes from a family of dairymen and cheesemakers, so is born to his trade. He is a brother of Frank Little, the highly successful maker at Menie. During the last two seasons, Stanley has been assistant to Robert Maybee at Empire Cheese Factory on the English Line. While there he was a valued member of the line baseball team in the Seymour League, and will undoubtedly be missed when another season rolls around.

Messrs. Fred Johns and Max Anderson of Craik, Sask., are visiting relatives and friends at Burnbrae, Menie, Rylstone and Campbellford. They are former residents of this locality, and for a number of years have farmed in the West.

Mr. Alex. Oddie of St. Catharines is visiting at his former home here.

PRINCE FAVORS ASTRID LONDON RUMORS AFFIRM

HEIR IS NOW 31.

Swedish Princess in London When Prince Returned From Tour.

LONDON, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press). — The matrimonial intentions of Edward, Prince of Wales, which for the last decade have interested the subjects of his father, King George, are declared by persons close to the court to be centred on his cousin, the Swedish Princess Astrid, niece of the King of Sweden and one of the new daughters of royal blood eligible by religion to become the consort of Britain's heir to the throne.

The source of this information would appear to take the edge off recent general denials that there was a possible heart affair between the Prince of Wales and Princess Astrid and that she contemplated an early visit to England. The Princess is already known and loved by the British reigning family, and it is again asserted that she will pay an official visit to London next spring, which will really allow an opportunity for her kinsfolk to know her better, and may bring a royal announcement that His Royal Highness has at last found a Princess of Wales-to-be.

If and when this announcement is made, Britain and, in fact, the entire world, will be agog to know truly that the twenty-year-old Princess of the House of Bernadotte has won this enviable position, into which most of the maidens of royal blood and countless others have been placed in fancy.

When he became heir to the throne, Britons began leisurely to look for a bride for him, and at one time or another all the Princesses of Europe—the German and Austrian prominent in the days before the war — have been mentioned. With the effect of the marriage of the Duke of York and Princess Mary with Commoners, the names of many daughters of the peerage have been coupled with him. Girls of North and South America were also picked by marriage prophets, and rumors suggested Megan Lloyd George.

Prince Now 31.

The Prince of Wales is now thirty-one years of age. Not for hundreds of years has the heir to the British throne reached this age without a wife. Most of the British girls believed at some time to be on the verge of marriage with the Prince found mates elsewhere, and this, with the collapse of enthusiasm which surrounded the visits of Princesses of Spain, Belgium, Italy and Rumania to England, made many people believe the story that the Prince had declared he would never marry.

It is authoritatively learned that the Prince several years ago informed his family that he did not wish to marry until he had completed tours over the Empire and that he would not take a bride unless he loved her. It is known that Queen Mary is anxious to see her children happily married, and that it was her desire for this happiness which brought royal consent to the marriages of Princess Mary and the Duke of York outside of the reigning families, and it is suggested confidently that the Prince of Wales, who has often met Princess Astrid, has more than a cousinly feeling for the pretty Swedish girl.

Princess Astrid has come often to England and long ago she won a place in the affections of the late Dowager Queen Alexandra. Her domestic talents made a kindly impression on the King and Queen, so much so that she known to be a special favorite at Buckingham Palace. The last visit of Astrid to London, before the death of Queen Alexandra, coincided with the return of the Prince of Wales from South America, and the Princess and her sister visited the palace, as well as Princess Mary's London house. There both the Prince of Wales and Prince Henry met her, and on other occasions, for the Princess was extensively entertained in Mayfair.

Diplomatic Aspect.

In the terms of that diplomacy in which royal marriages are recorded, the friendship of nations by the marriage of the Prince of Wales and Princess Astrid would be important, for in the late war there was a strong German influence in the court of Sweden, possibly heightened by the fact that the Queen was German by birth. There are already ties of marriage between England and Sweden, as the Crown Princess is King George's cousin, Lady Louise Mountbatten.

Even in great London, the gossips have no difficulty in keeping tabs on those interesting them. Thus it has been said in almost the same breath that Astrid was intended for the Prince of Wales and Prince Henry, just as it was rumored that Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon was marrying both the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York. It is, however, verified by friends of Prince Henry that he is not in the running and that his interest tends toward the noble family of the Duke of Buccleugh.

There might be disappointment in some hearts that the Prince married other than an English girl, but the precedent of the beloved Alexandra, who came also from Scandinavia, would probably make certain a welcome by the nation to this girl, whose life and education have been of a model sort.

INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY OF FRANCE ALLAYS IMPATIENCE OF COUNTRY WITH SHIFTING OF POLITICIANS

Keeps 2,000,000 Foreigners Busy Besides Her Own Workers.

FEELS CONFIDENT

People Willing to Make Generous Sacrifice to Stabilize Franc.

PARIS, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press).—France at the outset of the New Year has the balance of foreign trade in her favor, is keeping two million foreign workers, as well as her own five million laborers and mechanics, busy, paying them wages that make life easy for them and maintaining in circulation a mass of money that furnishes unparalleled business activity through out the country.

That undisputed economic fact, in the opinion of financiers and business men, accounts for the patience with which "the average Frenchman has suffered the irritating complications of politics and the vicissitudes of the financial situation. It also explains why the French people, notwithstanding the fact that the year end has left the financial problems of the country in the air, greet 1926 with easy confidence.

Looked at from the Government angle, a consistent and safe policy persistently followed will and must, put French finance on a plane with the economic situation.

"A budget that is balanced so that it will stay balanced, a sinking fund for debts that will be airtight against politics," is the way M. Doumer, Minister of Finance, expresses the essentials of financial restoration and the stabilization of the franc which may reasonably be hoped for and which should be the New Year's wish uppermost in the French mind.

"Confidence is the first essential," in the opinion of M. Francois-Marsal, leader of the Nationalist wing of the Opposition in Parliament, who adds: "A national union true in partisan quarrels, and a united effort by all classes will bring about the confidence."

The Socialist Plan.

The leader of the Communists, the other wing of the Opposition, thinks that a "dictatorship of workmen and peasants is the best thing the New Year can bring."

"Divisions in the ranks of the labor organization," he continues, "made it impossible for us in 1925 to prevent the Government from pursuing a policy of spoilation of the working class, but great progress was made toward a united front by all the proletarian elements. Nineteen twenty-five passes into history as the year of Morocco and Syria, as well as the year of Locarno. These geographic names symbolize hypocrisy, pacifism, bourgeois democracies."

The real spirit of the common people of France, according to Lucien Besnard, dramatic author, one of the persons outside of political circles engaging in the crusade for the renovation of finances is shown by the contributions of certain small towns.

"My burg, Courtomer, which with 800 inhabitants, counting women and children," he instances, "comes forward with a free offering of 100,000 francs for the sinking fund. They make the sacrifice cheerfully, without any other condition than that the fund be kept out of the hands of the politicians."

Impulse of Sacrifice.

Martin Namy, one of the industrial leaders of North France, who offered to pledge their properties as a basis for a movement to renovate French finances, says: "The offer made to the Government by the manufacturers has started the real producers of France in a line from which nothing can now distract them. The idea is contagious and has already caught the masses, as proved by the spontaneous gift of the modest people of Courtomer. A splendid mark has been set at the beginning of the New Year to other burgs, communes, towns and cities. All that is necessary to bring out in full the generous impulse of the people is the assurance that their sacrifice will not be in vain."

There are echoes from all sections of the Opposition in Parliament, and among the less party-bound members of the parties of the coalition of Premier Briand's words, "the spirit of Locarno has been introduced into internal politics."

They are still doubtful whether peace has really been made between the elements of the Chamber that have made war over the financial questions in the past eighteen months. They believe, however, that if war on the Government is renewed on January 12, when the Chamber reconvenes, it will be short, and that unless the Government wins over the partisan leaders, dissolution of the Chamber will be one of the first of the New Year's developments, giving the people a chance to elect a clear majority for the support of a stable government.

CAMPBELLFORD FIRE BRIGADE ANSWERED 39 ALARMS WITH TOTAL LOSS OF $1,825 IN YEAR

Department Cost the Town $604.16, Most of Which Went In Salaries.

RAISE REQUESTED.

Want Smaller Brigade, With Change in Method of Payment.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 4.—The total fire loss in Campbellford during the year 1925 was $1,825, of which $1,175 was on buildings and $650 on contents. The total number of alarms was 39, but at least one-third of these were for nothing more serious than for burning chimneys.

The fire department last year cost the town $604 16, of which $470 went to pay the salaries of Chief Chas. H. Davidson and the 16 members of the volunteer brigade, the balance, $134.16, being paid out for gasoline, chemicals and other supplies for the fire truck. The brigade was on several occasions called to fires out of town, and rendered effective aid with the use of chemicals, there being no water supply available beyond the limits of the corporation. The fire truck which has been in use for about four years is regarded as one of the best investments the town has ever made.

To Reorganize the Brigade.

Last year the brigade submitted to the Council a request for an increase in pay, their proposition being that the number of men on the roll be reduced from 17 to 12, as fewer men are actually required since the fire truck was put in commission than were needed when there were two hand reels, one on each side of the river. The men asked for an increase of $25 a year for the Chief and for 75 cents an hour in addition if the time put in at a fire was longer than 60 minutes. This extra allowance would amount to very little in the course of a year, as the services of the brigade are so rarely required for more than an hour at a fire.

No Action Taken.

Ex-Councillor Moore, who was chairman of the fire committee last year, brought in a report containing a new schedule of pay for the brigade, and this was so radically different from that suggested by the men themselves that the matter was allowed to drop. It is, however, proposed to take it up again with the new Council. Chief Davidson is at present paid $50 and the men $25 a year, and this is little more than sufficient to pay for the damage done to their clothing at a single fire.

Vincent Farrell is the acting deputy chief of the brigade, and all the secretarial work is done by Roy Bell. It is now proposed to organize the department on a business-like basis and to select a regular staff of officials.

To reduce the fire-fighting force as the men suggest and to increase the pay of the remainder would mean an extra outlay to the town of about $150 a year, and the men feel that on their record they are entitled to the extra compensation.

Vital Statistics.

There were 88 births, 30 marriages and 34 deaths registered in the office of Town Clerk McGregor last year.

In the year 1924 the official record was 93 births, 22 marriages and 37 deaths.

Home From Hospital.

Gerald, son of John L. Hay, who lost a leg when he fell under a train while returning from the western harvest fields, and who has been in a Toronto hospital ever since, has returned home. It is likely, however, that it will be necessary for him to go to Toronto again for further treatment.

HASTINGS PERSONALS.

The many friends of little Mary Comstock will be pleased to know that she was able to leave the hospital on Monday, having bee successfully operated on in the Nicholls Hospital. She was accompanied to Hastings by her father, Mr. F. N. Comstock, of Nanton, Alta., and Mrs. A. T. Fleming of Colborne.

ROSENEATH, Jan. 4. —The annual meeting of Roseneath Public School was held in the School House on Wednesday at 10 o'clock a.m. with J. G. Drope as chairman and M. Davey, secretary.

The auditors report showed a balance on hand of $1562.20. Bids were asked on 8 cords of maple and beech and one cord of cedar. H. Cayle was the lowest bidder on the hardwood at $9.50 a cord and Andrew Brown on cedar at $9.70 a cord. All wood to be piled in the woodshed; the hardwood to be two foot wood and the cedar 16 inches. Andrew Brown was appointed auditor and Wes. Pecey, the retiring trustee, was re-elected for a term of three years.

The change in the trustee system was discussed and it was decided to forward it to the Minister of Education a resolution protesting against any change in the present trustee system of the P. S. of Ontario.

Shop-windows on parade

IN THE quiet and comfort of your home, newspaper in hand, the shop-windows of the town's best stores pass in review. Look at that charming little hat—just the style you have been looking for, and so reasonable!

And say, isn't that coat a darling? . . . Not only do you see illustrations of the merchandise, but you are told in detail of its merits and prices. A passing panorama that may be halted and started and halted at will. A shopping trip at home!

How long do you suppose it would take you to reverse the process—to go up one street and down another, until you had visited personally every worth-while store in town? And how exhausted you would be, physically and nervously.

There's no doubt about it. The modern way to shop is to read the advertisements, then make notes of the stores and the particular offerings that appeal to you. What a lot of time and bother such a method saves. You know beforehand what you want to look at, who has it, and what you will have to pay.

Read the advertisements. Make it a daily habit. The regular reader of advertisements is better informed, makes the family budget stretch farther, has more time for recreation, gets more value for her money, and profits in many other ways. Advertisements are frequently the most interesting news in the paper.

Every day these shop-windows are lined up for your inspection in this newspaper

MONDAY, JANUARY 4, 1926.

THE NORTH MONAGHAN WINNER.

The re-election of Reeve Harold B. Rye to the head of municipal affairs in North Monaghan occasioned no surprise, and the huge majority recorded in his favour has been accepted as a merited endorsation of Reeve Rye's policies and conduct while in office.

Mr. Rye combines personal popularity with the ability to tackle municipal problems vigorously and effectively, and when you get these two assets in one candidate it is a difficult matter to seriously threaten his tenure of office.

He has always put municipal affairs first, and has, with the assistance of his Council, given North Monaghan a businesslike and economical administration which Friday's vote shows has been thoroughly appreciated by the ratepayers of the township.

CANADA IN 1926.

Canada is entering upon a new year with possibly the best prospects she has ever had. For some reason or other, whether it has been of our own making or that nature has been particularly kind to us, says the Natural Resources Intelligence Service of the Department of the Interior, we have just passed through a year of good crops, our mining industry has been busy, our forest resources have been actively developed and our manufacturing plants have gradually increased production. In fact, the possibilities seem to be about all we could desire, and there is only one question to be answered, "Are we prepared to make the most of our opportunities?"

If we sit down and limit the range of our vision to our immediate vicinity we may not see the bright outlook, while if we wish to be pessimists we can certainly find an excuse for being so, but we would have difficulty in finding a bona fide reason for any feeling of depression. Canada's clouds, the result of post-war conditions, are rapidly clearing away, and from the silver lining is shining forth a brightness that bids fair to place Canada upon the crest of the wave of prosperity in the coming year.

A SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT.

The majority of the electors who voted on Friday seem to be satisfied that the change in the location of the polling booths is a move in the right direction.

Not only will the use of the schools and the City Hall as permanent polling places do away with the old nuisance of trying to locate the polling booths, but there is an additional advantage in the fact that the schools offer much better accommodation for the voters than was provided under the old system.

It was possible to vote in comfort and no confusion was reported from any of the booths.

The new plan has been permanently adopted, and its usefulness will be even more effectively displayed when all the electors have become more familar with the plan and realize that at municipal elections every year henceforth the polling booth for each particular subdivision will always be held at the same school or at the City Hall as the case may be.

It is true that some electors found they had to travel quite a distance to vote, but that was a disadvantage that could not be avoided, and is more than offset by the general benefits of the system.

On its first trial the new plan worked splendidly.

THEY LIKE IT THERE.

Opinions as to the advantages and defects of daylight saving show a wide divergence as between city and city.

While the electors of Peterboro on Friday were piling up a fairly substantial majority against changing the clocks the people of St. Catharines were carrying by a big favourable vote a bylaw providing for daylight saving in St. Catharines for the next three years without the formality of an annual vote on the question.

Apparently in those centres where the system has been in operation over a term of years it is popular.

St. Catharines, for instance, has been adopting daylight saving each year, and the majority was so big at each election that it was decided that it was a mere waste of time to clutter up the municipal campaign each year with a bylaw, and New Year's Day the Council submitted a bylaw authorizing the adoption of summer time for a period of three years.

It was carried by a large majority, and St. Catharines will have no further fuss over the question until 1929.

In Peterboro, however, the hostility of a large section of the electors, including many women voters, to the daylight system was convincingly demonstrated, and Peterboro, Port Hope, Cobourg and Belleville will operate on standard time next summer, while Toronto, Oshawa, Bowmanville and Kingston will adopt the new time, creating a somewhat confusing situation throughout Eastern Ontario.

THINK IT OVER.

The Examiner has no desire to play the part of a kill-joy or pose as an alarmist, but conditions have arisen in connection with some of the public dances held in Peterboro during the past year or two, as well as elsewhere, that calls for a word of warning.

Dancing is an amusement that is enjoyed by many people and that in itself is harmless, but when it is accompanied, as in too many cases it has been at local dances, by more or less open indulgence in liquor on the part of a small percentage of those in attendance a situation is created that is painful to the majority of the guests and is a source of worry to the parents of the younger dancers.

The practice of carrying flasks to these social affairs is, according to reports, on the increase, and the result is apparent in the conduct of some of the offenders.

It is not necessary to go into details—everybody who attends dances knows the facts.

The situation has developed to the point where it becomes necessary for those in charge of these public dances to have the moral courage to deal summarily with patrons who violate good taste and decency.

The responsibility is indirectly, if not directly, upon those under whose auspices dances are held to protest against conditions that are fast putting a very enjoyable form of social entertainment into disrepute, and if they prefer the line of least resistance and attempt to close their eyes to the facts it will not be long before parents will be compelled to forbid their sons and daughters attending affairs of this nature.

The first organization that has the courage to grapple with this situation and deal firmly with the offenders will be sure of liberal patronage thereafter.

It is a pity that 95 per cent. of the people who like to dance should have their recreation jeopardized by the small per centage of those who haven't sufficient control over themselves or sufficient decency to act as gentlemen at social affairs.

DOING THINGS FOR OURSELVES.

Hon. W. H. Price, Provincial Treasurer, in a speech at St. Thomas before the Chamber of Commerce, charged that Canadians were making a serious mistake in allowing United States capital to be so largely employed in the development of our natural resources. His way of stating the case was that "Canadians should be more willing to grubstake themselves and take chances on making good." Mr. Price considered that as a people we were too willing to allow outsiders to come in here and do the pioneer work, engineer the developments and ultimately reap the rewards as well as control the situation.

In a recent issue of the Sault Ste. Marie Star the same idea was developed under the heading, "Did Providence Make a Mistake By Handing Canada Over to the Canadians?" The Star deplores the tendency that people have in imagining that the country is going to pass into a stage of vigorous development by passing resolutions, or by recourse to the great Canadian slogan, "Why can't we do this, that or the other thing?" The salvation of Canada, by the Star argument, "must be a matter of individual responsibility with Canadians. Things are not going to be fixed by resolutions." Continuing, the Sault paper says:

> "There is just one remedy—to create more jobs in Canada. If we had 1,000 more jobs in the Sault for men, we could have 1,000 more families here in a month. They would come eagerly at their own expense. If we have not jobs for 1,000, it would be very foolish for the Council to spend $50,000 a year getting 1,000 men to come here."

It is well that Canadians should face these questions fairly. It will serve no good purpose if we say that it is simply scolding our people, because a thorough and well-founded scolding is often as useful as bestowing well-merited approval.

It is safe to assume as a starting point that we should look to ourselves to develop our own resources and utilize our own channels of trade for our own business. Right now experts are telling us that it is not possible to handle Canadian western grain by Canadian water and rail routes because these routes are all determined by the foreign purchaser who buys the wheat and names the route by which he wants it shipped. If that is a fact, and if we are to allow it to remain a fixed fact, then it is a poor lookout for our transportation systems and our Canadian ports when they have to take second or third place to foreign competitors in handling a great commodity produced in our own country.

When it comes to milling the Canadian wheat another authority says it is not possible to capture the British market with Canadian flour, because the British miller selects his own blends and makes the flour the market requires.

We know that in Canada there are tremendous deposits of iron ore, but nearly all of it is low grade. The trouble here may be indicative of our trouble elsewhere. The truth is that we do not know how to refine low grade ore or to prepare it for the blast furnace on a commercial basis, and that condition, "we do not know how," may be the explanation for our failure to have made further progress in developing other natural resources. To devise the proper way to handle our low grade iron ore needs study, close, persistent, relentless effort. A few studious men did make progress through the use of the electric furnace, but we have not gone the whole distance. We need studious application by chemists, geologists, traffic experts, world salesmen. And yet how few have carried on this work. We have looked upon those who have attempted to carry on research work more or less as faddists; we have often complained about public money being spent on their efforts, and yet this work lies at the bottom of what we call our problems.

Canadians can do things. That has been demonstrated many times. In the World War Canadian workmen made records in the accurate production of munitions that were not equalled by any shops in United States. Even in the making of the time fuse, a delicate operation of dimensions more precise than anything ever attempted, the Canadian product was a mechanical triumph. Ontario has produced the greatest publicly-owned power system in the world, and Canadians are now grappling with the greatest Government-owned railway system in the world and bringing it each month nearer to ultimate success.

Nor can it be said that Canada has not money to invest. Our people buy millions of dollars worth of bonds each year, but they are largely Government, municipal or in some well-established industrial concern. A few years ago we were pouring our money for speculation in Western Canada, hoping for quick returns in the way of large profits. This was not development money, it was purely speculative.

We do need more of the pioneer spirit of development. Give us trained men who have the solution for the treatment of our natural resources, for their fabrication and marketing. Give us reasonable assurance that they know their subject thoroughly, and it is not unreasonable to predict that they will receive the backing of Canadian finance. On such a basis and with intelligent industrial leadership, Canadians could do many things that they are now inviting others to come in here and do for them.—London Advertiser.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

The 47 per cent. of the electors who failed to vote Friday should refrain from criticism during the year.

Every subdivision having shown a majority for the supervision of Sunday bathing, the result can be termed a clean sweep.

From a defeated candidate one year to the top of the polls the next is Ald. Hancock's record. Evidently the people liked the sample of his work as given after he was appointed to the Council during the year.

And now will come the annual race after chairmanships.

Toronto mayoralty candidate who polled less than 1,000 votes trebled his vote over the last time he ran. If he lives long enough he may yet be Mayor.

OBITUARY.

MRS. HUGH KENNEDY.

MILLBROOK, Jan. 2. — The death of Mrs. Hugh Kennedy (Beatrice L. Sing), on Monday, Dec. 28, after a very brief illness, came as a great shock not only to her immediate relatives, but to the community at large as well.

Deceased, who was the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Henry, and Mrs. Sing, of Port Hope, was born in the latter town a little over thirty-five years ago, and was one of a family of seven children, four girls and three boys. Two sisters, Bertha and Ethel, and one brother, Charles, predeceased Mrs. Kennedy, the immediate surviving relatives, besides the sorrowing husband and mother, being two sisters, Mrs. Thos. Wickett, nad Miss Edith, and one brother, Mr. Harry Sing, all of Port Hope.

The late Mrs. Kennedy taught school up to the time of her marriage, four years ago last September, to Mr. Hugh Kennedy, of Cavan and the sincere sympathy of the entire community is extended to the latter in his sad bereavement.

Previous to their removal to Port Hope, the Sing family homestead was on the Seventh Line, Cavan, and is now occupied by Mr. Thomas Douglas.

Connected with the former Methodist church all her life, and going with her husband into the Union last June, Mrs. Kennedy was a faithful member of her church, always interested in its various activities, and her place as a Sunday school teacher, and in the Ladies' Aid Society and Woman's Auxiliary, will be difficult to fill. Of a cheerful and lovable disposition, deceased won for herself a wide circle of friends.

The funeral took place from the family residence, Lot 13, Concession 3, Cavan, on Thursday, December 31, and at 10.30 a.m., proceeding by the 12.57 C.N.R. train to Port Hope, where a further service was held at the home of her brother-in-law, Mr. Thomas Wickett. Her pastor, Rev. F. H. Boward, had charge of the service here, and at Port Hope was assisted by Rev. J. W. Baird, who read the lesson, and by Rev. F. W. Anderson, who led in prayer.

The pall-bearers at Millbrook were: Messrs. W. Fred Fallis, Arthur Fallis, H. Argue, A. J. Brown, C. C. Garside and David Armstrong, and at Port Hope they were: Messrs. Russell and Harold Beatty, Dr. Totten, G. Garnett, Bailey Thompson, B. Oliver.

Among the many beautiful floral tributes which covered the casket was a wreath from the United Church Sunday school, and a spray of roses from the girls of her class.

Interment was in the Union cemetery, Port Hope.

"May I use your telephone? Important. Must get the police at once," chattered the amazing object that greeted the eyes of the servant. Bing was a thoroughly saturated, glistening visitor from an absolutely unknown world. He was a thing of many colors.

Before the blinking servant could muster the words to reply, or the strength to slam the door, a masculine voice called out from somewhere inside the house.

"Who's there? What's up?"

"God—God only knows, sir," cried the servant. "I never saw anything like— —"

"I say," bawled Carrington, manfully pushing his way into the hall—"I say, look here, where's your telephone? Don't come down. I must get hold of the police. Oh, hello! There you are. I didn't mean to get you out of bed."

A man fully dressed was coming hurriedly down the stairs. He stopped about half way down, and stared at the strange visitor.

"Well, for the love of Mike!"

"Where is it?"

"Where is what?"

"The telephone."

"Oh, the telephone? It's out of order. Isn't working. Can't get central or anything on it. But, who the devil are you and—what's up? Accident?"

"You needn't be afraid of me," chattered Bing. Now, remembering what was said about the telephone, he added; "Did you say out of order?"

"I did. What do you want with the police? But first of all, can't I give you a nip of whiskey? You seem wet."

"Say that again, please," cried Bing, eagerly.

"You seem wet."

"I didn't mean that."

"Oh, I see. Henry, bring it into the library at once."

"I'll drip all over your rugs."

"Hang the rugs. No, that's what you do when you beat 'em. I don't know what you do when you wet 'em."

"Sorry to get you out of bed like this," apologized Bing, following the other down the hall, his feet squashing in a most lachrymose manner.

"Can't you see I've got all my clothes on?"

"Oh, excuse me. I didn't know but what perhpas you might have—ahem! Yes, as I was saying, there is no time to be lost."

"Now tell me all about it," said his host, a stout, middle-aged gentleman. Henry had returned.

Whereupon Bing, in as few words as possible, gave him a bald and discreetly incomplete story of his most recent adventure.

"My name is Merrill," announced his host, when Bing paused for obvious reasons. Mr. Merrill was evidently a man of action and resource. "Rum runners, that's what they are. Now, I have a brother Bob Merrill—a good bit younger than I am. He's in the revenue service. That is to say, he's a sort of volunteer Secret Service man. Amateur sleuth, you know. Terribly keen about it. Simply delights in chasing smugglers, shooting at 'em, and all that sort of thing. Keeps his launch just off my landing. He's been out in the Sound tonight, roving around, looking for bad eggs. By bad eggs I mean smuggies. That's what he calls 'em, smuggies. I heard the launch come in half an hour or so ago and tie up to the buoy. So I suppose Bob's out there now. He sleeps on board these nights—ready for anything, you see. Now, I tell you what we'll do. We'll get a rowboat, paddle out there and get him on the job. He'll run these confounded pirates to earth or sink 'em."

"Well, that would be the same thing as running them to earth, all right. I suppose there's earth at the bottom of the Sound."

"Lots of it. Largely protected by bottles. Come along. Let's be off. No time to lose. Ah, I beg your pardon. You must get into some dry clothes. Henry, take Mr. Carrington upstairs and—and dress him. Give him that grey checked suit of mine. Shirt, underclothes, and everything too. You certainly need a change, Mr. Carrington."

"Oh, I am perfectly warm now. Clear down to my toes."

"Well, I'll have another one waiting for you when you come down. About the same dose—or a trifle stiffer?"

"Suit yourself, Mr. Merrill," said Bing genially.

He followed Henry upstairs and in a very short time returned to the library, completely—or to be quite honest about it—rather incompletely attired in Mr. Merrill's gray checked suit. Bing was a tall, spare man, Merrill a short, pudgy one. It was a very fashionable suit of clothes, but it lacked cohesion when applied to Mr. Carrington's frame. The coat scarcely reached to the small of his back, there was a seven or eight inch gap between waistcoat and trousers, and nearly all of Mr. Merrill's white socks were exposed to view.

"You look fine," said Mr. Merrill approvingly. "Much better than you did a while ago."

Two minutes later they were hurrying down to the shore, and Henry was off to a neighbor's to telephone for the police. Coming to the end of the float, the two men stepped into a small boat and cast off, Merrill handling the oars. The tiny light of a launch could be seen a short distance out in the Sound, bobbing slightly in the swell. The oarsman had not taken five strokes, however, before he stopped and uttered a mild imprecation.

"That dog-goned dog!" he exclaimed, peering over his shoulder. "Hear him? Hear the racket he's making?"

"I thought perhaps you had a small auxiliary engine up there in front— —"

"Not a bit of it. It's Bugle's tail. Stop that, Bugle! Do you hear me, sir? Cut it out! You see, Mr. Carrington, on hot nights he comes down here and sleeps in this boat. He's a regular sea dog. Loves life on the ocean wave and all that sort of thing. He'd sing it if he could, wouldn't you, Bugle?"

Bugle rapped twice with his tail.

"He raps three times when he wants to say No," explained his master.

"What does he do when he doesn't want to commit himself?" inquired Bing, who was feeling very bland by this time.

"Simply holds his tail, that's all. But we can't have him along with us now. Get out, Bugle! Down with you. Go home!"

Bugle ignored the command. He refused to move anything but his tail. Mr. Merrill resumed his rowing.

"Oh, well—all right," he muttered. Now to his passenger: "Bob will find this boat you're talking about—the Filomena, did you say? And he'll make short work of the darned pirates. If they run for it, he'll put a couple of one-pounders into 'em, and sink 'em."

"Good Lord! He mustn't do that. He mustn't sink Aunt Celimena."

"I thought you said her name was Filomena."

"She isn't boat. She's Connie's aunt. She's a lady."

CATTLE, GRAIN AND PRODUCE

Peterboro—Toronto—Montreal Winnipeg

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 4 (Canadian Press)—Owing to the fact that the Winnipeg and Chicago grain exchanges were closed on Saturday there was practically no demand from foreign buyers on the Montreal market for any kind of grain. Extreme dullness also marked the trade in the domestic market but prices were unchanged. Ontario and Quebec No. 2 White Oats were quoted at 52c, No. 3 White at 50 1-2c and No. 4 White at 49 1-2c per bushel.

The feature of the butter trade the past week was the marked improvement in the demand from both outside and local buyers and especially so from the former which indicated that stocks in second hands had been reduced to a pretty low level. The volume of business was fairly large as purchases of some good size lots were made and in consequence the market was more active than at any other period during the last month of the old year and as receipts were light stocks on spot were reduced to some extent. This created a stronger feeling in the situation and prices closed 1-2c to 3-4c per lb. higher than a week ago. There was no change in the condition of the wholesale jobbing market prices being firm at 44c per lb. for finest creamery in solid packages, and at 45c per lb. in 1 lb. blocks.

Foreign Cheese Weaker

According to private cable advices received on Saturday the English markets for New Zealand cheese were easier at a further decline in prices This naturally did not tend to improve the condition of the trade here which was again exceedingly dull owing to the continued absence of any demand from foreign buyers and in consequence the prospects for any activity in the near future are not very encouraging. Spot prices were nominally unchanged with early markets quoted at 21 1-2c to 22c per lb. and current receipts at 18c to 18 1-2c per lb.

The weak feeling that developed in the fresh egg situation in the early part of last week continued Saturday owing to the increased offerings from Ontario and Quebec producers and in consequence prices scored another decline of 3c to 5c per dozen making a net drop for the week of 6c to 8c per dozen and if the present favorable weather continues the production will no doubt be larger in the near future and values may possibly go still lower. Another factor that will have considerable bearing of importance on prices for fresh eggs in Canada will be the course of prices in the United States. The volume of business accomplished in fresh eggs the past week was fair there being a steady demand for supplies to meet immediate requirements and the market was moderately active.

Prisoners and Firemen Rescue Reformatory Cows

GUELPH, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press)—Fire broke out in the big dairy barn of the Ontario Reformatory at 11 o'clock this morning and for a time threatened the main buildings of the institution. The building destroyed was full of pedigreed cattle and hurried work was necessary to get these out in safety. Splendid work of the prisoners and the Guelph Fire Brigade soon got the fire under control.

FLOODS IN NETHERLANDS CAUSE ENORMOUS LOSS TO PEOPLE AND SOVEREIGNS LEAD RELIEF WORK

Albert of Belgium and Wilhelmina of Holland Visit Districts.

RHINE OVERFLOWS

Many Lives Believed Lost in Rhine Valley—Wet in England.

COLOGNE, Jan. 4. — From its commanding position on the Hohenzollern Bridge over the Rhine, the majestic equestrian statute of William II. gazes down to-day upon a scene reminiscent of old-fashioned woodcuts of the biblical deluge. Seemingly as far as the eye can reach, smiling Rhenian valleys have been transformed into a yellow sea, now kicked into white caps by a sudden gale, now moving murkily northward under a gray drizzle.

Upon the swollen river's surface nothing living is seen. Occasionally, however, one glimpses bloated carcasses of cows, horses and dogs caught in the floods, and wonders how many human bodies lie beneath the sullen, muddy waters.

The toll of lives taken by this disaster — unprecedented in the Rhineland's history—cannot be reckoned yet. With thousands of homes deserted to the river's wrath, and thousands of families lacking domicile, save in hastily prepared refuge centres, no census of the victims has yet been possible. It is estimated, however, that fully a score, mostly children, have been drowned, and hundreds lie in municipal hospitals, badly injured or stricken with pneumonia and other dangerous ills resulting from exposure.

Greater Loss at Trier.

This is in Cologne alone. At Trier, Neuwied and smaller communities inundated by the rapid rise of the Rhine and its tributaries, the list of casualties may prove to be larger still.

Damage to property also cannot be fixed as yet, but it will surely run into scores of millions of marks. Cologne tentatively places its loss at 10,000,000 marks, and this, judging by what the writer has seen of the havoc, is a highly conservative estimate.

Sugar Beet Land Ruined.

QUEDLINBURG, Prussian Saxony, Jan. 4.—Sixty thousand acres of the choicest of sugar beet land, from which pedigreed seeds are exported to America, have been ruined by the overflow of the Bode River, due to incessant rains in the Harz Mountains.

The factories and shops here have been closed, as the city is without electricity or gas.

Wide Devastation in Holland.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 4. — Queen Wilhelmina and all the members of the Government are devoting themselves to the relief of the people, who are suffering great distress in the disastrous floods.

There is no sign of their subsiding; on the contrary, latest reports say that the waters are rising everywhere. The Meuse and the Rhine have gained twenty inches during twenty-four hours. The only satisfactory side of the grave situation is that no loss of human life has been recorded.

Dykes have collapsed at various places and others are threatened. Small farmers and peasants are suffering severely; many have fled from their homes, abandoning their property and are crowding on to the railway dykes or other high ground, or signalling for assistance from the roofs or upper windows of their homes.

The River Vecht has now begun to flood the region around Utrecht, while from hour to hour fresh inundations are reported. The boat which conveys Queen Wilhelmina and the Prince Consort through the flooded regions is followed by a second boat loaded with foodstuffs for distribution.

Liege Hurt More Than in War.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 4.—King Albert in Belgium, like Queen Wilhelmina in Holland, is overseeing the relief work in the floods which are devastating the two kingdoms.

Wilhelmina at Nimeguen, in Gelderland, and Albert at Liege, are trying to stem the tide of desolation which threatens to overwhelm their people.

Liege has suffered more from the present flood than from the German siege guns which levelled her forts in 1914. The entire country surrounding Nimeguen is under water, and the losses mount into millions of florins.

Some estimates place the losses around Liege at 20,000,000 francs. Ten thousand houses are completely isolated, and the residents have been blocked in for three days. One hundred thousand rations are being issued per day, with King Albert and his Ministers personally supervising this work.

The train service in central Belgium is paralyzed; great numbers of cattle have perished and the flax harvest has been partly swept away by the flooding of the Lys. A slight fall was observed in the Meuse at Liege Saturday morning, but rain set in again Saturday afternoon and the waters are rising.

A national subscription has been opened through the newspapers and the Belgian Red Cross on behalf of the sufferers.

The Minister of Labor has convoked the chiefs of fire brigades to examine the possibility of requisitioning thousands of pumps through out the country and concentrating them in the inundated regions, especially Liege.

English Towns Flooded.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Several days of incessant rainfall in England and over the whole of Western Europe have caused the worst floods experienced in these sections in many years, due to the overflowing of rivers.

The valley of the Thames, especially around Windsor, is inundated. The town of Northampton is surrounded by water.

The Prince of Wales, the Duke of York and Prince Henry, who went hunting Saturday near Stapleford, in Nottinghamshire, were compelled to plod for miles along flooded roads.

Worcestershire and Buckinghamshire report the worst floods in years. Thousands of acres around Exeter are submerged. Many roads in South Wales are impassable.

prerogatives. It is believed that his reunciation will be followed by a divorce from Princess Helen and his remarriage to Zizi. She is no longer in Bucharest, and her whereabouts are unknown.

Resented Action in Plane Scandal.

The aviation scandal enters the situation in this way:

A number of airplanes bought some time ago from France were found to be in bad condition, causing several acciden. The officers purchasing and inspecting the planes were court-martialed and disgraced for graft. Carol, who was head of military aviation, was never openly implicated in the scandal, but when he heard of the action taken— he was absent from Rumania— he recently wrote demanding the reinstatement of the officers, which was refused.

Two opposing conclusions are drawn from this—he himself was so compromised as to be forced to abdicate, or he was so angered by the refusal to grant his request in favor of the condemned subordinates, that he determined to uphold them at the cost of the Crown.

Th erelations between King Ferdinand and Carol have long been notoriously strained, their temperaments, which are strikingly similar, and their desires, which are frequently different, leading to continual clashes. Consequently it is thought that the King, who is 60 years old, welcomed the opportunity to replace his troublesome son, aged 33, with his infant grandson.

Carol has also been often at loggerheads with Queen Marie.

He is not especially popular in Rumania, but both the aviation and love affairs have gained him some sympathy.

GREEK PREMIER TAKES CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT

Pangalos Announces Virtual Dictatorship at Guards' Dinner.

TO GIVE REASONS.

Army and Navy Reported Ready To Support the Premier.

ATHENS, January 4. Canadian Press. — Premier Pangaloc yesterday announced what amounts to a military dictatorship. He will take over the control of the entire government immediately.

The announcement was made at a banquet given in honor of the Premier by the Democratic Guard Regiments.

After paying tribute to the patriotic conduct of the army in the grave national crisis since 1919, Premier Pangalos declared that he was compelled for reasons that he would make public to modify his attitude as from Monday.

Henceforth he would assume the entire responsibility for the government of the country and rely solely upon the power of the army and the national conscience in order to save Greece.

Some of the other Ministers attended the banquet, but not the heads of the Foreign or Naval departments. In the course of his speech, M. Pangalos contended that since the revolution of 1909, the man who had made Greece powerful (Venizelos) had tried the experiment of parliamentary government but from that time the power of Greece had waned. Then came disaster in Asia Minor followed by the revolution of 1922. That revolution was only a partial success, for it failed to produce a condition of healthy politics.

At the close of his speech, M. Pangalos was accorded an ovation. A guard numbering 200 then left the hall and paraded the principal streets acclaiming Pangalos.

It is understood that an official proclamation will be issued to-day.

Elections to the senate have been indefinitely postponed but quiet prevails everywhere. It is understood that both the army and the navy are ready to support the premier.

SUCCESSFUL TOUR WITH MAGIC SHOW

"Billy" Bowman Home After Year on the Road.

Wm. (Billy) Bowman, business manager of Bert Johnston's Magic and Fun Show, has been home for the holidays after a year's tour of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick. Their itinerary included villages and cities, "packing them" in town halls and big theatres with such agreeable results that the company has twenty-seven return dates already booked.

At the Majestic in Ottawa the show did $700 more business in a week than any other company, and Mr. Bowman also said they played Montreal for four weeks. One of the amusing incidents of the tour was up in Quebec. The company had gone from Montreal to Mount Laurier and their next jump was forty miles to Maniwaki. And those were the longest forty miles in the year's travels, and then some. The trip was made by automobile and took 48 hours, the cars having to be towed nearly all the way over that memorable road. At Williamston in Glengarry the Johnston show played in the assembly hall of the Presbyterian church under the auspices of the Catholics of the town.

Mr. Bowman said the company has another solid year in sight, and may be booked out of New York. The settings and drops for Mr. Johnston's allusions were imported from England at a cost of $8,000, and the company is well equipped. According to the personnel announcement Mr. Bowman is referred to as "Bert Johnston's Hired Boy."

GAS EXPLOSION IN RESIN PLANT KILLED FIFTEEN

Pine Gas Accumulated in the Cupolas of Turpentine Company

AT PENSACOLA, FLA.

Victim Blown 150 Feet—Factory Only Slightly Damaged.

PENSACOLA, Fla., Jan. 4. — Fifteen known dead and seventeen injured was the toll of an explosion and fire which did comparatively small damage to the million dollar pine extracting plant of the Newport Rosin and Turpentine Company on Saturday. The explosion occurring from what is believed to have been an accumulation of gas in the cupolas of the plant. The bodies were badly burned and mutilated, and at the morgue to-night there are eight unidentified victims.

Inidications are that some of those who were hurled to death with the explosion may never be identified because of the condition of bodies.

Fulk was hurled through the roof of the buliding. When found 150 feet away from the wrecked building, he was still alive and requested aid from persons who discovered him. All around the woods were burning, and in a conscious period he asked that his head be removed from a root which made it uncomfortable. Then just as he lapsed into unconsciousness from burns and shock, he requested his rescurers to "tell my wife that I die in peace." In an unconscious state he was conveyed to the hospital, where four hors afterwards death came.

Some of the bodies were terribly disfigured, being without hands or legs, and one had lost both legs.

List of Dead May Be Increased.

At the morgue hundreds of relatives and friends gathered, and this has led to the belief that the list of dead will be increased when all employees have been checked up. The plant employed probably 200 men regularly.

The explosion occurred in what was known as the cupola or retort section and is attributed to a collection of pine oil and gases.

The plant itself was comparatively little damaged by fire, as the cupola room and the cooperage departments were the only ones destroyed. The loss is covered by insurance. The plant has fifteen different buildings for various uses. It extracts gums and oils from pine stumps and logs and occupies probably ten acres just outside the western limits of the City of Pensacola.

Leading officials of the company were visiting the plant at the time. President Spitz of Milwaukee was a guest of General Manager McCormack. Another visitor was President Baker of the General Naval Stores Company, New York, who was accompanied by J. H. Logan, Vice President of the Newport Company, all of them coming here to plan enlargements of the plant.

Several weeks ago the plant of the Newport company located at Bay Minette, Ala., was seriously damaged by fire and repairs had just been effected. A part of the force here was to be transferred to that plant to start off a large output made possible by installation of modern machinery.

NO PEACE SIGN IN COAL STRIKE

Miners and Operators Are Deadlocked on Arbitration Question.

IN FIFTH MONTH.

NEW YORK, January 4. — Continuation of the strike of anthracit miners, now in its fifth month, was forecast yesterday when a canvass of sentiment on both sides indicated that neitfier miners nor operators were prepared to recede from their positions on the question of arbitration.

The joint conference will reconvene at the Union League Club on Tuesday, and unless in meantime a compromise plan resolving each side's views on arbitration is drawn up and accepted the deadlock is expected to continue. In that event a break-up of the conference is looked for on Tuesday or so after.

There was no indication Saturday, 48 hours after the adjournment of the latest joint session that the operators would abandon their demand for arbitration or that the miners would give up their opposition to the suggestion of an impartial tribunal to arbitrate the points of difference.

It was learned that the operators have no plans for a meeting of the full scale committee to-day as reported several days ago. The mine owners are not hopeful of being able to write a clause on arbitration that will meet with the approval of the miners' representatives.

May Modify Proposal.

The operators, it was reported, will probably make further efforts in the direction of toning down the method of arbitration along the line presented by them at the last meeting. At that time they proposed a modification of the Markle plan so that after investigation by an impartial board of three representatives of the public, the latter were to prepare a report. Such report was to be made to both sides within 30 days of the submission of the points in dispute. If within 30 days of the submission of the report to the miners operators the latter failed to agree, the board would decide the dispute.

Representatives of the miners opposed the proposal as vigorously as as previous arbitration measures. They declined to write a two and one half or five year agreement upon definite terms without arbitration.

A break up of the joint conference would leave the door open for Federal intervention. There have been hints of such a step for several days, but nothing definite has come from Washington.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania is scheduled to meet in special session to consider several important matters (including the coal situation.) Reports in Harrisburg recently were Governor Pinchot might ask the Legislature to declare anthracite a public necessity and place the industry under the Public Service Commission.

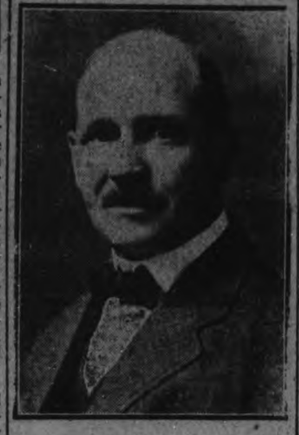
MY TWO YEARS AS MAYOR



Mayor J. J. Turner, who took office in 1924 and has just completed a two-year term as Chief Magistrate of the City, acceded to The Examiner's request that he give the citizens the benefit of his comment on the work of the office. Much of interest will be found in his article which follows:

* * *

Everyone from time of consciousness keeps a book of remembrance and experience and I open my book of experience to examine a new condition which began with my election to the office of Mayor beginning 1924.

I had been a member of Council for a number of years and accepted office with a desire for service to fellow citizens. The work of Councillor is full of interest, especially to a new man who has had no municipal experience although one might have wide business or industrial experience. One finds a different viewpoint from self centre to the point of view of others and sometimes it is difficult to interpret what may be considered the viewpoint of the majority, as frequently much noise is made by a few which may mislead one to think the majority speaks. The broader viewpoint on all questions for discussion and adoption gradually grows as one spends more time in the work and Councillors who have served an apprenticeship of a few years should be valuable men in civic administration and the work should go along more smoothly for having experienced men. Of course, there must be new beginners and these associated with men of experience will soon adapt themselves and assist to carry on while serving their apprenticeship.

Then one steps to the Mayor's chair and the responsibilities change, for one steps from a member of a family to the head or father. Where the Councillor thought for himself and what might be best for other members of the family—one buries his personal feeling and thinks to direct municipal affairs in the interest of many families of different types, shades of thought and expression, over which he is the head. In every sense of the word, he should stand as father in the community, thinking of the good and welfare of all.

The Mayor should make careful study of municipal work, having in mind constructive suggestions to improve operations without increasing expenses or impairing efficiency. By virtue of his office he is a member of the Board of Health, the Police Commission, The Childrens' Aid, The Hospital and Library Boards, and The Protestant Home, and by regular attendance learns of problems and offers suggestions toward solution, which may co-ordinate the work and produce better results. The health of the citizens is of first importance and represents the real wealth of the community and this fact dawns on one when sitting at the Board meetings for the first time. The health of the citizens is affected in so many ways by impure water, conditions in around homes and buildings to attract flies whom we find are carriers of disease proper isolation of contagious disease —supervision of food supplied and place where produced—safe milk—proper sewage—clean streets—removing stagnant water — cutting weeds, and generally concerned in providing a sweet wholesome community in which to live. One finds oneself bearing the responsibility for the proper sanitary condition of the City and while one is associated with others in this work, the onus of improving conditions and carrying on the work rests with the Mayor—who is guided of course and influenced by the advice and judgment of the officers of the City and associated members.

Complaints from citizens dealing with various matters should be promptly investigated to see difficulties as they are and suggest prompt measures for removal and adjustment.

* * *

The Mayor being ex-officio of all public organizations, it is his privilege and duty to attend as many meetings as possible, to be educated in the work done. To commend and encourage those carrying on in the public interest as many groups of men and women are serving voluntarily to make the lives of others healthier and happier by their service.

Public monies are paid to various organizations and all should be on the Mayor's visiting list with calls or attendance at meetings as frequently as possible. I have in mind the work carried on by the Children's Aid Society, a volunteer body of men and women looking after the needs of the orphan—the destitute, bringing into their lives warmth, food, clothing, education—to give them a chance to stand in the activities of the world and become useful citizens.

Think of the Peterborough Health Association, The Well Babies Clinic, the work done by service organizations such as the Big Sisterhood, Daughters of the Empire, Rotary, and Kiwanis, the Home and School Associations — all endeavoring to help to build up a happy community life and make life easier for those who carry a load.

The Mayor should be known to everyone — and everyone should speak or bow to him as he passes along the streets, including the boys and girls. He should be sympathetic with all and especially with the sick and embarrassed in the community. He should be able to rejoice with those who sing, and weep with those who weep. He is really a father with a large family of different ages and ideas all interested in the same work—but he must be careful not to let selfishness or bias obscure his vision or influence his judgment to the detriment of others. He should be a man of careful judgment, good moral character and altogether a man who the community will respect. The business of this municipality is carried on by those employed who do not change every few years, and these guide the Mayor and Councillors by interpreting the law covering municipal government.

While the Mayor and Councillors are the elect representatives of the people, and have power to rule, they are in continual conference with city officials, concerning all city business.

The Mayor of a city the size of Peterborough could spend practically all his time in the city's interest, if he were free from other engagements; as he should be the City's representative at all conventions, conferences, and social engagements both in and out of the City. This is not always possible for both Mayor and Alderman have their living to gain, and cannot sacrifice all the time from their own business which might be used to advantage in City business.

In Aldermen the same sacrifice of time should not be necessary, but it would be advantageous if the Mayor had all the time required to devote to City affairs.

During the past year events in surrounding municipalities have occurred such as Old Home Week in Belleville, Kingston and Smith Falls, advancement of North Bay to a city, unveiling of cenotaph at Toronto. Conventions discussing questions concerning municipal government and at all these functions the Mayor of this City was welcome if convenient to attend.

In addition to outside engagements a round of calls should be made inside visiting the Children's Shelters, the Hospitals, the Homes for the aged and infirm, as well as visits once a year to every industry in the city, to show interest in all the various activities carried on in the municipality. Such a programme as outlined would not be possible in a large city like Toronto, but our City is of such a size it is possible to make a round of calls during the year and cover every institution, every industrial plant in the city. The Mayor's job is as big as he desires to make it. If he can spare the time, a full day can always be spent on city business to advantage.

Looking back over the past two years, some thoughts stand out which if adopted would in my opinion add to the dignity of office.

* * *

We appear to have no inaugural ceremony, but just present ourselves, the Mayor and Councillors elect, to Mr. Armstrong, City Clerk, who administers the oath of office. We take our seats and the work is on. I believe some ceremony should be instituted, such as inviting the general public to attend in the City Hall at the time specified to take part in any inaugural ceremony which may be used and among those to attend should be the clergy, who should have part in the proceedings.

The office of Mayor and Councillors is a dignified one, and something might be done to maintain the dignity and make an impression on the minds of the public, especially the young men and women who may aspire to occupy positions in years to come.

I think there should be consecration of service to the office for which we have been elected and this function properly belongs to the clergy. This event should be annual and preparation made, decorations and refreshments supplied, with short addresses for the success of City business under new administration.

Thinking of our inaugural ceremony one thinks some mark of distinction should be adopted to indicate the Chief Magistrate, such as badge or collar or gown, to be worn when presiding at Council meetings and on public occasions. No incumbent of office thinks of his own glory but is anxious to administer the affairs of the City wisely and do honor to the position to which he or they have been elected.

The idea of dressing for the part seems to be inborn, for how many times have we watched very young children playing and dressing up to represent Mother or Teacher or some one who to the young mind has made an impression and set an example to copy or imitate.

The dressing up energized the child, helping it to play the part it had in mind. History is full of testimony of proper garments worn on certain occasions, both in the secular and sacred world, and what I suggest is not new, for many City and County Councils use robes or collars or both while carrying out their municipal conferences. Thinking then about the office and the dignity it carries, I believe an inaugural ceremony an advantage, and insignia of office necessary to maintain the dignity of Mayor and Councillors in public esteem.

One of these is said to be a device to produce new silk from old rags and scraps, while the other is a single method of obtaining silk direct from silk-worms without waiting for the formation of the cocoons.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silvar

HOW BILLY WOODPECKER SETTLED A DISPUTE.

When Bunny Rabbit came dashing back to the brier patch all out of breath, the neighbors came running up to see what was the trouble.

"Meadows on fire?" asked Johnny Mouse. "Better tell us quick, I don't want to lose everything that I own. Is it a fire, I ask you, Bunny Rabbit?"

"Fire, nothing," cried Bunny Rabbit, shivering so that even his stubby little tail bobbed up and down. "I declare I saw a ghost, as sure as I'm a rabbit."

"Then you're no rabbit, laughed Chippy Chipmunk, "for there's no such thing as a ghost. What did it look like, Bunny Rabbit, or can't you tell? Was it tall or short, wide or narrow?" And Chippy Chipmunk laughed merrily.

"You wouldn't laugh if you had seen it," shivered Bunny Rabbit. "It was just the image of Mr. Ermine, our worst robber of the meadows, only——"

"Only what?" cried all the neighbors at once.

"Only he was snow white all but the tip end of his tail, that was jet black," cried Bunny Rabbit. "I know it was Mr. Ermine, himself, or his ghost!" and Bunny Rabbit shivered until his ears shook.

"Ghosts are white, but I never yet have seen a white ermine," declared Chippy Chipmunk. "Bunny Rabbit,

"I declare, I saw a ghost."

what have you been eating to make you see a snow white ermine? Mr. Ermine is reddish-brown and I can prove it by everyone present."

"Well, the ermine I saw," snapped Bunny Rabbit, "was white as snow."

"You were just too frightened to tell brown from white, Bunny Rabbit," sneered Chippy Chipmunk. "I'll admit I don't like the fellow, but the sight of him wouldn't frighten me to the extent that I couldn't tell brown from white."

There's no telling what might have happened if Billy Woodpecker, who had been a silent listener all this time, hadn't come down from the limb of the tree and stepped between the two friends.

"Don't fight," he chirped merrily. "You are both right. When you saw Mr. Ermine last, Chippy Chipmunk, he was reddish brown. But when Bunny Rabbit saw him just a few minutes ago, he was snow white."

"What in the world are you trying to tell us?" chuckled Chippy Chipmunk. "I never saw Ermine dressed in anything but brown."

"Then you'll have a chance to see a snow white ermine," laughed Billy Woodpecker. "For Mr. Ermine has put on his Winter suit and if you folks aren't ready for Old Winter, you had better not waste your time in quarreling. You'd better get ready for Winter, Mr. Ermine has the right idea. In the Winter time, he can slip around without being seen if he dresses in white. He always changes his reddish brown suit for a white one when Winter comes." Then away flew Billy Woodpecker.

Bunny Rabbit looked at Chippy Chipmunk and they both laughed. "Well, I'm glad you saw him Bunny. We'll know what to look for." After that the two friends went hopping through the woods. That was the last time they ever quarreled.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

TUESDAY, JANUARY 5.

A day of cross influences is read from the lunar and mutual configurations. While the moneyed interests are well aspected and new undertakings are under auspicious conditions, yet there may be danger through writings and publications. Also there is a possible menace through abrupt or ill-considered change, removal or journey. With particular sagacity things may be turned into successful channels.

Those whose birthday it is may encounter a year of reversals of fortune, an intermingling of good and evil, which latter may be overcome by attention to the clever manipulation of affairs, and refraining from sudden moves of any nature. Slow and sure should be the watchword. Refrain from personal worries, also. A child born on this day may look for an eventful career, with ups and downs, the latter caused by a tendency to abrupt and ill-considered acts, flying from one situation to another precipitately.

PAPER AND BOXES FROM WASTE WOOD

Mills Find New Uses for the Scraps of Lumber and Save Thousands of Dollars.

New uses found for shorts and scraps —the ordinary waste from lumber — promise to save thousands of dollars in the lumber industry. Recent experiments in Cloquet, Minn., a little town of forest fire fame, have found value even in branches and tops of trees—everything down to three inches in thickness. Mills now burning lumber waste under their boilers, it is predicted, soon will look for less valuable fuel.

Three new ways have been found to utilize waste formerly considered not worth hauling away from the forests, says "Popular Science Monthly" for January. These are the manufacture of a new kind of paper, balsam wool, and artificial boards.

The triumph in paper making was the discovery that poplar and jack pine, thought unsuitable for this purpose, could be used for making bond and other grades of paper. Both kinds of trees have a natural reproduction, and a simple forestry scheme, it is claimed, will insure a perpetual supply of raw material for paper mills.

The leftovers from the paper mill in Cloquet are used to make balsam wool, a new fire-resistant insulating material. It can be applied to houses, ice boxes, fireless cookers, refrigerator cars, and many other purposes. When wood fiber is passed through the screen of a paper mill, a certain knotty substance, known as "rough screenings, will not go through. This mass of fiber, when used in the manufacture of balsam wool, is put through a sulphite process, fireproofed and ground. It is treated to give it adhesion, and finally is brought out in the form of a sheet of light insulating board.

Box factories, having discovered a way to cut tongue and grooves on small boards, now are turning to use many board of sizes too small for piling in lumber yards, that is, material three inches in width or under, and from 12 to 47 inches in length. The boards are glued together to make boxes. A box factory in Cloquet now is using 11,000,000 feet of such shorts.

CROWN PRINCE FALLS IN LOVE FOR THIRD TIME SAY GOSSIPS WHEN HE FAILS TO COME HOME

Rumania's Heir Apparent Missing Since Funeral of Queen Alexandra.

MARRIED TWICE.

Crown Council Quickly Summoned to Discuss Grave Situation.

PARIS, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—Queen Marie of Rumania is searching far and wide for an errant son, Crown Prince Carol. Since he attended the funeral of Dowager Queen Alexandra in London, Carol has failed to show up at the Royl Palace in Bucharest.

The sunny skies of Italy and a beautiful Italian woman, prominent in the social realm, are declared to be chief attractions which are keeping the 32-year-old heir-apparent to the throne of Rumania aloof from the royal domicile. In other words, it is whispered in Parisian social circles that Carol has suffered another heart attack—his third.

During the stay of Carol in Milan, an emissary of Queen Marie was dispatched there with orders to bring the royal wanderer back to Rumania forthwith. The Crown Prince, however, quickly departed for Ravenna.

Carol twice has been married, once morganatically to Mlle Zyali Lambrino, daughter of a Moldavian professor of good birth but poor, and the second time to Princess Helen of Greece.

Some time ago came the report that Carold and Helen had separated and that the Princess would ask for a divorce.

Crown Council Meets.

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Dec. 4 (Canadian Press).—Because of the gravity of the political situation created by the absence of Crown Prince Carol, the Crown Council was summoned unexpectedly to-day.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

Why does a baby vomit?

A well nourished breast-fed baby is not apt to vomit. The bottle-fed infant is more likely to do so.

Almost always vomiting on the part of an adult is due to wrong eating. Unfit food is the chief cause for infant vomiting, too. Tainted milk or the feeding of some indigestible food is sure to upset the stomach, and vomiting is the symptom sure to follow.

Most of the infectious diseases may begin this way. For instance, the first sign of pneumonia, scarlet fever or diphtheria may be a sudden attack of vomiting. An infant may have a convulsion, instead of the chill which ushers in the fever if the victim is an adult. It is probable vomiting will come next.

Obstruction of the bowel, either from some serious cause or from marked constipation is another cause for vomiting. This possibility makes it important to examine carefully the infant who begins to vomit without previous sign of ill-health.

Disturbances of the brain have vomiting as a symptom. Inflammation of the coverings of the brain will produce it. So will brain tumor. We will put aside these unpleasant possibilities because they are too rare to worry about.

It is safe to assume that the vomiting is due to indigestion. Treatment should be given on this supposition.

Most young mothers are afraid of starving their babies. They think nourishment is necessary and that something terrible will happen if it is not given regularly.

Many times vomiting is difficult to stop just because the poor little stomach is never given a bit of rest. If there is vomiting, the mother should cut off every particle of food and, for a few hours, certainly, the child should be denied water, even. A short time of absolute stomach rest is almost certain to control the vomiting.

To sweeten the stomach and overcome the acidity which wrong feeding has produced, bicarbonate of soda may be given. To a glass of water add a teaspoonful of soda. Of this mixture give a tablespoonful every twenty or thirty minutes. Give it less frequently as the vomiting is controlled.

The bowels should be emptied. A carefully given injection will accomplish this.

These simple measures may be tried till you see your doctor. If the vomiting is not controlled, or if the vomiting attacks occur every day or two, you must talk with the physician. He will advise more detailed treatment.

TAXI DRIVER ROBBED.

OTTAWA, Ont., —Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press). — Following complains laid by Rene Robert, taxi-driver of Hull, that he had been robbed of $18 while sleeping in a garage office on New Year's Eve, Clare Wissell of Hull and Albert Lambart were arrested Saturday. The two men charged had been in the garage when Robert went to sleep.

SCHOOLS AS POLLING PLACES

By F. H. D.

We have turned over an old leaf. On Friday, polling day, the public schools were made use of, and in which the several polling places were placed, thus doing away with the time-honored service afforded by the corner grocery or the kitchen of a dwelling. So far as concerning the day at those polls in the Central School building, on Murray Street, the venture was a complete success, and the change proved to be a good one. Not only for those in charge of the duties of the day but for the ratepayers as well. Many of these spoke of the pleasant surroundings, the rooms well lighted and warmed, conditions that impelled self-respect, in that the voter felt that he or she was now taken care of in a decent way and invited to take part in a civic responsibility heretofore looked on as at times a disagreeable experience.

None objected, even if getting to the poll meant a walk of some blocks, for with thoughtfulness the polls had been assigned in such ways as to meet the convenience of the ratepayers. For a first effort nothing but approval was heard, especially from the women voters.

It appeared, from the exclamations and remarks, that the day was one for the "Old Boys" to come back to surroundings that they knew so well in earlier years. Especially for those who in boyhood had been taught in the rooms of the Central, the First School, that took the place of the log schoolhouses, and the old church school at the corner of Hunter and Sheridan Streets. The Central School was built in 1860-61, and when put to use was eagerly occupied with the prospect of better days for the pupils and brighter surroundings. The building, at the time, was so far ahead of anything in the town and district that going to school became attractive to the boys and girls. It seemed to be a distinct surprise to many to find the school rooms in such a good state of preservation.

At nine o'clock the polls opened, and on to the hour of closing hundreds came, looked about and voted. Then tramped through the halls, where, as they said, they had once ran and raced and made uproar as children. Especially did the fine room, on the second floor, at the south-west corner of the building, bring back memories. So well lighted and appointed, carefully kept in order, with the rows of desks and seats that have done service for so many years. Desks that showed the effects of predatory jack-knives and an occasional gimlet. Initials cut in the sturdy beech or maple of the desk and certain caballistic letterings of which one could not decipher the import. All the work of active minds and restless bodies.

Especially did this room evoke memories. In it was placed poll No. 29. In came the mature aged manager of one of our industrial plants, recorded his vote and then began to inspect the surroundings, accompanied by a friend. "See here," he said, "this was 'Billy' Smith's room, and I was a pupil in it thirty years ago. I sat in this seat in the third row from the wall. Here's a nick I cut with my knife, and was whaled for so doing." "Yes," said his friend, "and it's a wonder that's you didn't learn something while you were at school." A pained silence followed.

A man from Montreal stalked in, accompanied by two sons. The citizen did not come to vote but to bring a lunch for one of the performing staff. Pointed to the seat and desk where he sat years ago, under Teacher Smith. Found sundry notches, the work of his hand and his knife. And his sons sat down and snugged, in turn, into the seat and leaned on the desk where the father had been partially educated very many years ago.

The same string of comment and remarks, all over the building. A special antique, from amongst those present, found the room in which he studied, sixty-four years ago, when the school was a brand-new building. From the north window, at the time, could be seen the old log school in which "Parson" Taylor taught languages, modern and dead, and dispensed much of wisdom to those who could absorb the same. The venerable log structure, tucked in amongst the oaks and pines at the north-east corner of the lot, and at the edge of McDonnel Street. College Street, at the time, had no houses on the street frontage, the only dwelling being that of Dr. Chas. Ormond, at the corner of College and Murray Streets. Victoria Park, as we now see it, was a dense growth of oaks, pines and underbrush, with the county building perched on top of the hill. The east and south sides of the hill had nothing but St. John's Church for decoration or use.

For Friday's service careful preparation had been made that the conveniences for polling were on hand. In voting most of those presenting themselves did not use the compartment provided, but moved about the room and sat at the desks and considered the ballots and made their marks in peace and quietness. The City Council is to be commended for making the change, and it is hoped that the locations will be permanent.

In Peterborough Churches

MURRAY STREET.

The communion service was one of the largest in the entire history of the church. A series of studies, to continue three months based upon the Parables of Christ, was introduced by Dr. Rose. The parables to be considered during January are all to be found in Matt. 13. The United Church and Sunday School Service has had a remarkable year. The experiment of such a united service has commended the plan so completely that one does not hear a person expressing a desire to return to the old method.

During the day complimentary reference was made by the pastor to Fire Chief Gimblett and the members of the Fire Department. He said: "But for their exceptional care the church would have had the windows broken and other more serious damage done to the property beyond that now visible."

ST. JOHN'S ANGLICAN.

Archdeacon Davidson of Toronto, occupied his old pulpit in St. John's yesterday morning and evening, large congregations being present. He expressed grateful appreciation of Christams massages and the kindness still being shown to him by old friends in a city and a congregation which would always be close to his heart. He congratulated Mayor-Elect Holloway, a member of St. Johns and trusted that the congregation and citizens generally would "line up" behind him for public service and for the advantage and further improvement of this fine splendid city. He felt that the congregation generally would unite in the honours lately paid to Mr. H. Rush, one of Peterborough's central citizens and a benefactor of many. Mr. Rush had combined loyalty to the Church with broad and close fellowship with all Christians in a striking fashion which should be followed widely.

He referred touchingly to several members of the congregation who had passed away and hoped that they would never be forgotten in the House of Prayer which was also a "House of Remembrance" which should extend also to the many members who had gone elsewhere but who still affectionately remembered St. Johns.

Archdeacon Davidson also congratulated the congregation on the striking financial advance which had been made under Dr. Blagrave's skilful leadership and the healthy condition of the Parish and of the Sunday School in its too-cramped quarters.

Preaching from the text "Things new and old," (Matt. 13-52), the Archdeacon referred in passing to some of the efforts made in old days including the wiping off of the big debt of the Church which gave them in those days a freedom from debt like that which they were now after much effort enjoying, the building of the St. John's Mission Building, now All St. Saints School House and the great efforts thrown into the organization of that congregation, the wide work accomplished largely through the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the relief of public destitution when old clothes and provisions were gathered from the whole city and sold to all needy citizens at a trifling price or given away.

After references to other local efforts, Archdeacon Davidson dealt with the main subject of the text, viz.: the successive revelations of truths new and old to the world through Christ and His Church. While the Saviour had brought an entirely new revelation, His was no revolutionary substitution, but rather the radical development of old truth. "He came not to destroy but fulfill." In the wonderful history of the Church there was a succession of enlightenments through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Thus the great central matter of the Divinity of Jesus Christ was thoroughly gone into and determined in the Great Council of 325 A. D., its findings enshrined for all time in the Nicene Creed.

"The Reformation accomplished the purifying of the ancient Faith which from our standpoint had become encrusted, had maintained the right of the approach of the individual soul direct to God, of which men to-day were not taking proper advantage, as we had too much concern about our individual souls. The services were simplified with the object of being made thoroughly congregational, the whole body of the people being brought into action. There was a strong call for this side being brought out more fully. We could never be too thankful for these and other principles of the Reformation while granting the rights of others to different opinions.

"The Evangelical movement of the 18th century emphasized the need of the individual soul dealing with a personal Saviour, while the Oxford movement of a century later brought out the value of corporate religion, the Church and the Sacraments. As the English Branch of the Whole Church Universal, the Church of England, had received all these revelations from the past and as having come down with great cost, let them as precious treasures be valued and used."

The speaker went on to deal briefly with new developments which were taking place in this new age. The call to move simply and literally follow Jesus Christ and to carry His Principles into daily life. The call to lay greater emphasis on practical goodness in belief and life. Cultivation of a wider brotherhood of man and avoidance of war under any circumstances.

"Altogether," said the Archdeacon, "while we give unyielding support to basic truths received from the past (guarding especially the supernatural let us be thankful for the general tendency towards reality and goodness and help them on. With our faces to the future relying on one presence of Jesus Christ and the guidance of the Holy Spirit, let us combine the treasures of the past with those interesting new Truths which have developed by all means pressing forward the coming of the perfect kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The flag on St. John's tower was raised in honor of Archdeacon Davidson's visit.

ST. PETER'S.

Yesterday, the Feast of the Sacred Heart was marked by a large attendance of men at the eight o'clock Mass at St. Peter's Cathedral. His Lordship Bishop O'Brien exhorted the men of the congregations at the different Masses to honor and respect at all times the sacred Name of Jesus Christ, referring to the Epistle of the day: "There is no other name given to us whereby man may be saved."

"We should love and honor and respect not only the Holy Name of Jesus, but also the name of God," said His Lordship. "We should love and honor and respect the three sacred names of the Holy Trinity, just as we honor the good names of our fathers and mothers. God is our nearest friend, after all, so let us resolve not to take the Holy Name in vain, nor to repeat the improper story, the evil, suggestive joke or the street-corner remark."

The main portion of the morning discourse at the Cathedral yesterday was a review of church activities during the year, with a lengthy reference also to the Cemetery.

HORNE ATTACKS RUBBER CRUSADE

CRY UNJUSTIFIED.

LONDON, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press. — An attack on Secretary Hoover's crusade is made in the Sunday press in a signed article by Sir Robert Horne, former Chancellor of the Exchequer and one of the leaders of Conservative party. Sir Robert Writes:

"The present outcry in America is not only ungenerous but unjustified. I am perhaps in as good position as any unofficial person to put forward a point of view as I was Chancellor of the Exchequer at the time when there was formulated the scheme of restricted export commonly known as the Stevenson plan which many persons in America are condemning as the cause of great injury to the United States."

Horne says the chief reason for the increased price of rubber is the enormous growth in demand, especially in the United States.

MORE THINKING REQUIRED SAYS DR. MORRISON

Rotary Club Should Supply Lead Along This Line, He Suggests.

TO-DAY'S LUNCHEON.

Mayor-Elect Dr. Holloway Is Guest of the Rotarians.

Rotarian Dr. M. A. Morrison was the speaker at to-day's luncheon of the Peterboro Rotary Club at the Empress and his address on New Year's opportunities, as applied to Rotary, was thoroughly enjoyed by the mebmers.

Among the guests to-day was Mayor-elect Dr. W. T. Holloway, who was given a hearty reception by the Rotarians. Next Monday the whole new council will be guests of the Rotary Club at luncheon.

The communications included a letter in Spanish from a new Cuban Rotary Club, the translation of which was given by Rotarian R. A. Browne.

A letter from W. H. Dickin urged the attention of Rotarians to the necessity of supporting the Boy School movement, and the need of leaders, notifying the Rotarian Club of the correspondent of a trading class for Scout Masters.

A committee composed of Rotarians George Gillespie, chairman, Hugh Bertram and Gerald Wood was appointed to arrange for the Rotary farmers' meeting.

Rotarian Ross Dobbin was named as chairman of the On-to-Denver committee.

Dr. Morrison in his address pointed out the advantages enjoyed by Peterboro, stressing its proximity to the game and fishery paradise of the province and urged the necessity of progressive measures. More thinking on the part of everybody was required, the speaker thought, and he believed that Rotary could do its part by giving a lead along this line. There was too great a tendency to allow the newspapers and magazines to do one's thinking and the use to capacity of the general brain power would lead to wonderful results.

Our governments, Federal, Provincial and municipal, must be given to understand that the people are sincere in their demand for a reduction in expenditure and for the removal of those handicaps to business that now exist. Governments were but human and settled conditions could not be expected unless the demand for economy was made plain.

In the municipal arena Dr. Morrison lamented the system by which a citizen was penalized for improving his property. While industries were given a fixed assessment which did not change, no matter what additional construction took place, the average citizen was afraid almost to drive a nail or swing a paint brush for fear he would find his assessment increased as a result.

Dr. Morrison was given a hearty vote of thanks for his address.

SOLDIERS PAY UP.

Large Sum Received From Settlers During Past Two Months.

OTTAWA, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press).—In the two months of the 1925-26 collection period settlers under the Soldier Settlement Board have made payments amounting to $2,139,602, which is 52 per cent. of the amount due according to the statement made to-day by Major John Barnett, chairman of the Board. This is $340,000 in excess of the amount paid in by December 31, 1924.

MECHANICAL FARM HAND.

The cow said to have kicked the lantern tha started the great Chicago fire would have had no such opportunity under the modern milking conditions made possible on the smallest, most isolated farm by Warren A. Shippert, of Dixon, Ill., the inventor of a portable milking machine that not only milks the cow, but [illegible] does a dozen and one chores about the farm. Among other things, it can be used to run the cream separator, pump water from the well, churn butter, drive the grinding wheel for sharpening tools, and run the corn sheller.

LICENSE TAGS ALL HERE NOW

Passenger Numbers This Year Run Up From 266-501

5,200 RECEIVED.

The council room of the Chamber of Commerce looks like a warehouse now. It contains several dozen small boxes which hold the motor car tags for 1926 to the number of 5200.

The passenger car licenses rn from 266-501 to 271-500; trucks from C34-35+ to C34-750.

There will be no increase in the prices of the licenses with the exception of those for trailers. The heavier types will be taxed at a slightly higher rate. The new color scheme is black on a gray background. As there were only two convictions last year on charges of false declaration the license board felt justified in rescinding that clause and the motorists may obtain their tags without the usual clutter of red ape being unwound.

RAILWAY BOARD MAY TAKE OVER LONDON RADIALS

If Efforts To Break Deadlock Fail Board Will Step In.

WOULD HAVE TO PAY.

Under Board's Management Fare Might Be More Than Five Cents.

TORONTO, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press.)—Following enquiries made at the offices of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, this morning it was learned that if efforts being put forth by the Board to break the deadlock existing between the street railway and the City of London fail, the Board would in all probability step in and assume control of the road.

The Canadian Press was informed this morning that the road considers the telegram of Frank Schmuck, a citizen of London, sufficient authority to step in and operate the cars if negotiations to bring about an agreement fail. Mr. Schmuck's wire was received by the Railway Board at 9.55 this morning. The Board immediately acknowledged receipt of Mr. Schmuck's wire, also notifying the company and the City Council of Mr. Schmuck's request. The Board has also wired the City of London and the street railway asking for immediate telegraphic reports upon the situation at the moment. These reolies will be awaited before any future action upon the part of the Board is decided on. Chairman Ingram, during the hearing of the argument before the Board, intimated that if the Board took the road over it would have to pay the operating expenses and he could not see how this could be done on less than a five cent fare and expressed the opinion that it might possibly be even more.

FINDS THE FACE OF MAN IS SHRINKING

Noted Evolutionist Predicts Pinched Cheeks, Cramped Brains, Long Noses.

Will men of the future have small, cramped brains; sparse hair; long, thin, and prominent noses; tiny, "precious" mouths; narrow, squinty eyes, and no jaws or cheek bones to speak of? Will they, in brief, resemble water-blooded, "esthetic," meagerly nourished morons?

The answer is an unqualified, disheartening affirmative, according to a recent estimate made by the noted British biologist and evolutionist, Sir Arthur Keith, Fellow of the Royal Society. Before arriving at his sensational visualization of our future face, says Popular Science Monthly for January, Sir Arthur had examined and made records of hundreds of buried skulls of all ages (from the fragments supposed to date back to 500,000 B. C. to the present day), and also had measured carefully the heads and features of thousands of living persons.

His general conclusion: "Evolution even now is rapidly at work on our faces," may be tabulated in detail as follows:

1. Man's brain capacity is growing steadily smaller.
2. The roof of our civilized human mouth is becoming reduced in size and narrower.
3. Our jaws are receding.
4. Our nose is becoming sharper, narrower and more prominent.
5. Our eyes are becoming narrower and sinking more deeply into the face.
6. Our cheek bones are becoming less prominent.
7. Our whole face is becoming narrower.

Those who maintain that modern man has ceased to evolve, according to Sir Arthur, usually cite the similarity between the modern and ancient Egyptians to prove their contention. Only 10 years ago he himself believed that the evidence from English excavations led to the same conclusions. But his opinion was altered by his most important investigations, carried out in recent years. He took 50 skulls (25 of men and 25 of women) from English graves that were known to be 1,000 years old or more; some of them were as ancient as the Pyramids. He carefully compared these ancient skulls with those of corresponding men and women who had lived in England in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The result convinced him that the changes noted above actually have been taking place—actually are taking place much more rapidly than generally i supposed.

NEW SUBSTITUTE FOR DIAMONDS

After several years at research, metallurgical experts of a steel plant in Wetzlar, Germany, claim to have produced a metal alloy nearly as hard as the diamond, reports "Popular Science Monthly." The alloy consists of a fused mixture of metallic tungsten and tungsten carbides. It is said to retain its cutting power much longer than the diamond.

EDISON, 79, IS BUSY ON NEW INVENTIONS

Works Only 18 Hours, But May Give Us Battery to Last Years.

Edison in his seventy-ninth year is running short of time—has to sleep so much now that his working day is limited to a pitiful 16 or 18 hours. And he needs every moment of that short day for his important activities. For America's grand old man of science, at the age of nearly four score years, is still stalking nature's secrets. He is busy perfecting two of his inventions—the phonograph and the storage battery. In fact, before long he may give to the world a new automobile battery that may last 10 years instead of two—an invention that would mean a saving to America of more than a hundred million dollars a year.

This much of Edison's present activities is revealed in a remarkable interview with the great inventor, appearing in "Popular Science Monthly" for January.

"Which of your inventions are you completing or perfecting?" Edison was asked.

"Phonograph and batteries," was his reply.

"On what new lines of research are you now engaged?"

"Many. Wait until I've caught the fish."

"What inventions does the world most need today?"

"The world doesn't need more just now until general intelligence has increased so men can be had to operate what we have."

Edison was a bit tart in the last answer and seemingly contradictory, too, of his own effort to give the world more new things.

"Do you still cut down on sleep, Mr. Edison?"

"No." Evidently meaning that the sleep period now is fixed.

"How much do you sleep?"

"Five to six hours. The quality is still perfect."

Asked about his present diet, Edison replied:

"I eat very little. The amount of power one can get out of a piece of toast is marvelous. What menu? One and one-half glasses milk, tablespoon cooked oats, one sardine each meal. Weight constant—186 pounds."

This menu is followed for weeks at a time and it includes all meals.

"What is your present view of college education?" Edison was asked.

"Impracticable," was the terse answer.

"Can you give a little advice to young men on how to develop creative talent?"

"Young men do not take advice," said Edison gravely, perhaps with a very slight twinkle in his eye. He added: "Creative talent apparently cannot be acquired."

Has man progressed mentally in the last 50 (or 5,000) years?

A few years ago Edison rapped out a stiff negative to this very question. You can judge whether now he is not mellower and more hopeful of humanity by this answer:

"Yes. The number of men in every nation, per capita, who are honest, humane, and highly intelligent is increasing. This number is a measure of our civilization. The Lord appears to be in no hurry."

"Will man yet attain a drudgeless world through machines or by tapping the power of sun, tide, or atom?"

There is no limit to the invention of fully automatic machines," replied Edison. "Man will work less and less."

NEW YEAR PARTY.

A very large number of members and their friends held a New Year's Eve party on Thursday, December 31, at their lodge rooms. Cards, dancing and community singing, led by the well known Brother S. Harris, a song by Mr. C. Cole. A phonograph loaned by E. V. Warne, 325 George street, and a radio furnishd the music to the great satisfaction of all. Refreshments were served at 11:30 and as the bells chimed the old year out all joined in singing Auld Lang Syne and dancing was carried into the early hours of the morning. Brothers S. Harris, Cooper, Storey and Rutter were in charge of the evening's entertainment while the companions of the Court looked after the dainty refreshments that were served.

Have you any disagreeable recollections of cod liver oil? If so, you will agree in calling Drs. Harry E. Dubin and Casimir Funk, biochemists of New York, real benefactors. According to Popular Science Monthly, they claim to have developed a new extract from which the nauseous taste is removed and which contains, in a given quantity, several thousand times as many vitamines as the original oil.

Ripples are Sponsored by Fashion

Here is presented a silhouette in long bodice effect with ample lower flare, a conspicuous feature of both the daytime and evening mode. The recent Exposition of Decorative Arts at Paris caused some lovely designs in printed and bordered silks to be developed, one of which was chosen to fashion the upper part of this charming frock, with the flared skirt section in crêpe-back satin. This model has a convertible collar opening far enough down the front to allow it to be slipped on over the head, and fastens with a narrow tie of the crêpe satin. Long full sleeves showing the border at the lower edge are joined to the kimono-shoulders and gathered into bands of satin at the wrists. No. 1033 is in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Size 36 bust requires 4¼ yards 36 or 40 inch, or 3¾ yards 54-inch material. Price 20 cents.

PIBROCH SKIRLS AT HAMILTON WEDDING

The skirl of the pibroch sounded 'neath Hamilton mountain this week when one of the city's fairest and most popular daughters was claimed as the bride of a highland gentleman and will return to the land from which her forbears came four generations ago. The bride, Mary, only daughter of Mrs. Hendrie, of Gateside House, and the late Colonel William Hendrie, is shown in her bridal gown of ivory moire, which is an exact duplicate of that worn by the Duchess of York at her wedding. The bride is also seen leaving the church on the arm of her husband, Ronald Stuart, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fleetwood Cumming, of "The Downs," Abedlou, Banffshire, Scotland.

The Secrets Of Charm

By Lucrezia Bori

If your hands are not attractive, you must consider this your own fault.

Now, of course, you cannot change the general contour of your hands as nature made them, but you can take such immaculate care of them that you bring out the best beauty possibilities which are there.

There are certain things which you can do, however. You should be able to feed your hands into a more pleasing plumpness, if they need it, by the nightly application of a good skin food. Also, a deft pinching of the tips of your fingers, at various times during the day, is often a great help toward making them more tapering.

Keeping your hands in the pink of condition should be an unvarying rule with you, for it is impossible for you to overestimate the value of hands which are immaculately well-groomed at all times. You are judged by their appearance, just as you judge others by the appearance of their hands.

How often have you looked at the hands of a person you had met for the first time, and judged them according to the signs you observed there?

So it is with others. If they see that you possess smooth, well-groomed hands, they are disposed to judge you favorably. If the day happens to be one when you started out in a hurry and neglected your hands as the first time-saving measure, you may be thrown into confusion by seeing someone glancing at your tell-tale nails.

If you make it a rule to brush your finger-nails with a nail-brush when you wash your hands, this will insure their softness and cleanliness. Any particles of dirt which may linger beneath your nails can be easily removed with your orange stick. Then a moment or two spent filing and polishing will insure the appearance of which you can be proud.

I want to give you here the best treatment I know for hands which have a tendency to become red and chapped and harsh during the cold weather:

First of all, dry them thoroughly every time you wash them.

Next, rub a bit of pure mutton tallow into your hands before you go to bed at night. If you rub this in thoroughly, the skin should remain smooth and white.

PRESENTATION TO CHURCH WORKER

Table, Chair and Fountain Pen Represent Gratitude for Services.

BETHANY, Jan. 4. —On Wednesday evening during the Sunday School festivities the members of the Church did honor to one of its most untiring and conscientious workers in the church in the person of P. C. Brown. Rev. A. Poulter called upon Mr. Brown to come forward and Douglas Driver read the following address:

Bethany, Ont., Dec. 30th, 1925

Mr. P. C. Brown,
Bethany, Ont.

Dear Friend and Brother:

One of the greatest joys of life is the fellowship of God's people and the joining with them in the worship of God and labouring together for His Glory and the promoting of his cause in the world. Paul addressed his assistants as "co-workers" and as we meet together in this social way we would like to think of ourselves in this relationship. We all desire to be co-workers with God.

It may be a surprise to you that we should single you out and address you personally to-night but we trust that the surprise will be pleasant to you and remain in your memory as an act of gratitude on the part of your fellow church workers. Words of appreciation are never spoken as often as they should be but now we take the opportunity of jointly thanking you for your services in our church.

We have found you to be most loyal and untiring in you efforts to help along the work in church, sunday school and Young People's Society. Those of us who are in closest touch with the activities of Our Church life know how many hours you have spent in the Church for our comfort and convenience and we know that every hour has been gladly and cheerfully given and every request for aid has been met gladly with a smile.

These words very poorly express our feelings but we hope that they will at least convey to you our deep appreciation of your labour of love.

We would not wish you to think that we are remunerating you for your services but we would ask you to accept this gift as a mark of our esteem and friendship, a friendship which we trust will grow as the months pass by. May Our Heavenly Father abundantly care for you and bestow His Blessing upon you and if it be his will we hope for many years of useful service together.

Mr. Jackson presented the gift—a Library Table, a Gentleman's Chair and a Fountain Pen. The Table and Chair was of Oak, the chair upholstered in leather.

Mr. Brown made a suitable reply although he was greatly taken by surprise. Then everyone present arose to their feet and sang heartily "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and gave him three cheers.

FASHION FANCIES

The dance frock, which has a rather fitted bodice and full skirt, is ideal for the slender figure. The model above chooses white chiffon for its medium, and adds spangles for trimming.

These flat, fridescent spangles cover the bodice, introducing an occasional coral colored one for variety, so that the coral spangles trace a pattern on the bodice. They are also repeated in the border of spangles at the bottom of the full skirt.

M'GILL DEFEATED HARVARD 5-4 BEFORE ROARING GOTHAM CROWD IN 30 MINUTES OVER HOUR'S GAME

Montreal Students Scored Two in Third Period, Tieing the Count.

SOCIETY THERE

Ralph St. Germain Canadian Star—Attendance 12,000 in Rickard's Rink.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—(Canadian Press).—McGill University's hockey sextette Saturday night toppled the spectacular team of Harvard Univer city in the longest, toughest and most thrilling battle seen in the new Madison Square Garden when, after hammering away at each other for an hour and thirty minutes, the Canadians broke through to win, 5 to 4.

Two goals down into their United States opponents at the completion of the second period, the Moutrealers surged forward from the opening of the regular final frame and tied the count. Then overtime was called and the two hockey machines, weary from the heart-breaking pace since the games start, battered away again. But so evenly were they matched that after 25 minutes of fervent attacks, the score board still read four goals all.

A crowd of about 12,000 in which could be counted a good sprinkling of usually staid society folk, had reverted into a howling mob by the close, nerve-wracking play and as a final five overtime period was called for either a decision or a draw verdict, the Garden was a reverberating bedlam.

St. Germain Scored.

The Harvard Cantabs pierced through the Montreal line with a lightning charge from the final face-off, but Goalie Murphy absorbed the hard shock. Then Captain Abbott led his Canadian squad into the Harvard goal zone, but they, too, were turned back. Finally St. Germain, raw-boned left wing for McGill and scorer of three of the four goals already, rang up for his team, secured the disc back of his own net, charged through to the Harvard defense, sent a sizzling pass to Mickels as he waited in front of the United States goal mouth and the puck was deflected into the cage for a Canadian victory. Mickels had sent a high shot at the Harvard goal tender that hit the latter's shoulder and rebounded into the twine. The play came after twenty-seven minutes and fourteen seconds of overtime.

St. Germain's playing throughout the contest was nothing short of spectacular. In the first period, after Harvard had gone into the lead, the left winger took the puck from the face-off and sent in an evening tally. When Harvard secured another goal a minute and a half later, St Germain went boring through in his ponderous style and tied matters up again with a second goal.

When Harvard Spurted.

Things looked blue for McGill in the middle period when the Cantabs registered a pair of goals and kept the Montrealers on the defensive but with the coming of the third frame, the Canadians staged a rally that could not be denied. Abbott bulged the Harvard twine first and the lot again fell to St. Germain to run in another goal that put the teams on an even footing for the third time during the match.

In the accounts of the battle in todays New York papers, St. Germain is hailed as the "second Hobey Baker." The Harvard team was fast and presented a smooth-working combination but, in the words of The New York World, "one St. Germain was equal to an entire team."

The line up:

BOXER WINS AND SINGS.

"Singing Dutchman's" Encores Were Opera Selections.

LONDON, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press) — Joop Leit, heavyweight pugilist, known as "the singing Dutchman," proved his contention Saturday evening that prize fight fans like grand opera as well as rough and tumble bouts, if served to them with fitting surroundings.

After punishing Billy Prestage, of Nottingham, at the Friars' fight hall so severely that Billy surrendered at the end of the second round, Leit regaled the ringside patrons by singing selections from Pagliacci, with Wagnerian airs for encores. The spectators were so pleased with the Amsterdam boxer's singing that none of them thought of asking the management for their money back because the fight ended so abruptly.

OPENING GAME JUNIOR SERIES FOR TOMORROW

A STRONG SQUAD

Some Promising Young Players Are Trying Out for Places on Team.

Lew LeBarr and Walter Jackson have a fine bunch of Juniors ready to go into action tomorrow night at Brock Street Rink against Markham in the opening game of the local Junior O.H.A. group, and are confident of sending the visitors home with the short end of the score. The boys have been practicing faithfully and are the pick of the large squad which answered the call for the first practice of the season. Two or more are available for every position, and now that the squad has been cut to about a dozen, the management is having a hard time deciding which shall be regulars and which substitutes.

Among the players on the squad, from which the team is being finally picked at tonight's practice, are goal-keepers Mein and Hall; defence players LeBarr, Woods and Allen, and forwards White, Kennealey, Calladine, Cripps, Franks, Chambers and Sowden, and others.

The schedule for the local group has been drawn up in such a way that the Junior Petes play Markham twice before Lindsay meets either of the other teams. The return game is scheduled for Friday night in Markham.

The kids will put up a good game, and are all possibilities for the Senior team in the next few years, and the fans should turn out to support the boys and encourage their leaders to give time and thought to their training, so that they may be developed to their full capacity. Last year's team went into the finals for Eastern Ontario, losing out to the fast Brockville team after two hard games, and this year's team is equally worthy of support and promises to go further.

SEIBERT'S BRILLIANT PLAY GAVE MONTREAL MAROONS 3-2 VICTORY OVER NEW YORK IN EXTRA PERIOD

15 Minutes' Overtime in Montreal Before 10,500 on Saturday Night.

DEFENSIVE GAME

Seibert Was the Pivot in Maroons' Attack—His Best Performance.

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 4—(Canadian Press).—Babe Seibert has had himself elevated to the position of "clean-up" player on the Montreal pro hockey team. Recently it was the flying Dutchman who raved the way for an overtime victory for Montreal over Pittsburgh. Saturday night at the Forum, while 10,500 fans roared their delight, Seibert showed his marvelous reserve strength, by coming back after being practically knocked out in a collision, and beating the crafty Vernon Forbes for the deciding goal which gave Montreal a 3 to 2 victory over the New York Americans after 15 minutes of overtime play.

It was a magnificent play by this rugged left wing flash and one which was robbed of little of its glamor because the goal was scored with New York playing short of Captain Billy Burch, who was watching the play at the time from the penalty bench where he had been banished for slashing around with his stick. Seibert was the pivot of the Montreal team in the gruelling struggle. He gave the smartest display of the many clever exhibitions he has shown since jumping to pro ranks this season. Worn out by flashy attacks, he was occasionally dropped to the defence for relief and there was equally brilliant, his hefty body standing him in good stead.

A Defensive Battle.

In fact it was the play of the Dutchman, coupled with that of Dinsmore and other robust Maroons, which was a big factor in the speedy contest. The game became a defensive battle largely, with neither team being able to penetrate the opposition defensive. Goals came only when the side scored against was short through penalties and for the most part of the contest settled down into one of attrition. Montreal with smarter reserve strength than New York and through the able juggling of players by Manager Eddie Gerard outlasted the Americans. It was only spectacular play by Vernon Forbes in the New York net in the last ten minutes of the extra period which kept the game underway. The Maroons fairly hemmed the Gotham sextette to their own side of the blue line and rained shot after shot at Forbes, which the crafty little net guardian turned aside. But Seibert's sizzling drive was too much and Forbes had to give way before the swarming Maroons.

Burch A Star.

It was a gruelling struggle marked by plenty of strenuous clean bodying; little deliberate rough work; much backchecking which broke up attack after attack on boh sides and throughout it all stood out Captain Billy Burch, of New York, Seibert and Dunc Munro, of the Marocns and the two goal keepers.

As a hockey game the battle was a trifle ragged through the close checking, which ruined combination efforts, and through the heavy play which wore down the player of both sides. But at all times it was exciting as fortune favored first one side and then the other.

Broadbent had counted the first goal in the opening session, though up to the tally New York had enjoyed a slight edge in the play due to a brilliant start by Billy Burch. Kitchen rushed the puck and was skated to the corner of th erink by the New York defence. Seeing no chance to shoot Kitchen started to look for a chance to pass the puck. He spotted Broadbent just outside the American defence and whipped the disc to the Maroon right ginger. Broadbent droe the puck right through Forbes for the tally which started the scoring entries.

Maroons Tie It Up.

Montreal's lead was short lived. For a minute later Red Green, who had been showing in flashes for the visitors, intercepted a pass from Kitchen to Seibert and worked right in on Benedict to equalize the count. Little more than six minutes after the start of the second session Billy Burch hooked the puck to himself at mid-ice and let drive from outside the Maroon defenc. The puck went right through Benedict for the counter which put New York ahead. Again the margin was short-lived, Montreal got a break a minute later, the forward going down threeabreast against two New York defence men, Simpson being off at the time serving a penalty. Stewart was carrying the disc and he faked a pass to Seibert on the left. The New York pair moved over to meet the play and Stewart shot the puck to Broadbent on the right. Broadbent was unmarked and was able to bore right in on top of Forbes to tie the count at 2-2.

Final and Overtime.

Then came the gruelling third period, which gave every indication of both teams tiring to the point where neither side would be able to count, especiall against the sound net guarding that was being shown at both ends of the rink. But New York had not the subs to keep up the pace in the final session. They spurted for a few minutes at the start of the extra period, but when they failed to beat Benedict on three attempts, it was their final push. They dropped back to a defensive game and were hanging on at the last for at least a tie, being handicapped first by the loss through penalty of Charlie Langlois, the robust defence man and later Billy Burch, who was off when the break came which ended the game in Montreal's favor.

The line up:

Montreal — Goal, Benedict, defence, Noble, Munro; centre, Stewart; forward, Broadbent, Seibert; subs, Dinsmore, Kitchen; Rothschild.

New York—Goal, Forbes; defence, Randall, Langlois; centre, Burch; forward, R. Green, McKinnon; sub, Simpson, Bouchard, S. Green.

RAIN THROUGHOUT SCOTLAND REDUCED SOCCER ATTENDANCE

Biggest Crowd Saturday Saw Rangers Defeat Partick Thistle.

FIELDS WERE HEAVY.

GLASGOW, January 4. — Canadian Press Cable. — Football conditions in Scotland were miserable on Saturday, rain falling over nearly the whole of the land. This turned the fields into quagmires and also militated tremendously against attendances. The biggest crowd of the day was present at Ibrox Park, where the Rangers defeated Partick Thistle by two to one. The game was well fought and was featured by Rangers' strong finish. Cunningham and Cairns starred for the home team, while Millar turned in one counter for Partick.

Cowdenheath met their first home defeat of the season when they were downed by Heart of Midlothian, the latter having recovered from their beating of New Year's day, when Hibernians completely avalanched them. Murphy and Smith were the recorders for Hearts while Devlin secured his customary goal for Cowdenheath.

Two Scoreless Games.

Four draws out of the ten games featured play, two of them being scoreless. Aberdeen at Hibernians, and St. Mirren at Greenock (Morton.) Motherwell put up an excellent fight at Falkirk when they held the "Bairns" to a division. Murphy, Stevenson and Ferrier registered for Motherwell, while Cod, Dougall and Mulhall responded for Falkirk. The fourth draw, that between Raith Rovers and Dundee on the latter's ground, saw one goal each scored. Dundee were lucky and just scraped through, Campbell equalizing in reply to the Kirkcaldy team's goal, scored by Brown.

Airdrieonians, Dundee United and Celtic performed well in acquiring full points away from home. Airdrie took the measure of Hamilton academicals by 4 to 3, Anderson obtaining two and Mudrock and McPhail one each, while Hamilton's three were got in the second half through Williamson (2) and Borland.

Surprise at Kilmarnock.

Dundee United's win at Kilmarnock, was one of the big surprises. Simpson recorded twice and McDonald once, while both of Kilmarnock's tallies came from Weir.

Queen's Park played well against Celtic in the first half, but they collapsed entirely in the second session, and allowed the Irishmen to win as they pleased. McGrory starred a couple of times with Thomson and McLean completing the count, while Gillespie shot in the "amateurs" solitary tally.

DISTRICT HOCKEY LEAGUES TO-NIGHT

Madoc Assists at Stirling Rink Opening.

Two district hockey leagues go into action tonight and one of them formally opens the new rink at Stirling where Madoc is the visiting team. Of the four towns represented in the new Hastings county league Stirling is the only one possessing a covered rink, which was built during October and November and completed before winter set in. Madoc, Tweed and Marmora may be inspired by Stirling's community investment, and with real rinks in another year or two the group will be compact and well equipped for hockey.

The Trent Valley League opens with Campbellford at Havelock tonight, and as the C.P.R. team is apparently as strong as ever they will probably start with a win. In this league Campbellford alone has a covered rink, Hastings and Havelock being content with the sky as a common roof for their two sheets.

Other games in the district this week are as follows:

Hastings County.

Jan. 5—Marmora at Tweed.
Jan. 7—Stirling at Madoc.
Jan. 8—Tweed at Marmora

Trent Valley.

Jan. 7—Hastings at Campbellford.

VARSITY BLANKED DARTMOUTH TEAM

Toronto Beat U. S. College 10-0 in Boston.

BOSTON, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press)—Toronto University's flashy hockey team smothered Dartmouth on the Arena ice here Saturday night 10 to 0. Except for the first period, the Green was never dangerous. The victory gave the Canadians a total of 29 goals to 2 for the opposition in their last four games. Boston College was the only opponent able to register a score against them.

Stewart Anthory, Dartmouth's goalie, who was called on to face the Canadian bombardment, was taken from the ice late in the game after a flying stick opened a cut in hisc head that required several stitches to close.

SHUT-OUT WIN FOR PARKDALE

MORE TEAM PLAY.

TORONTO, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press.) — Parkdale Canoe Club scored its second successive victory in the Senior O.H.A. series by defeating Kitchener 3 to 0, at the Arena on Saturday night, before a fair crowd. Kitchener, after its great overtime struggle with Peterborough earlier in the week, was favored to defeat the Paddlers, but though George Hiller and George Karges, the veterans of the Green Shirts, tried everything they knew to put over a win, superior condition, stronger defence nad more team play on the front line enabled Parkdale to blank their opponents.

ENGLISH GAMES WERE FEATURED BY BIB SCORES

Ten at Swindon Set High Mark in Saturday's Soccer.

FLOODS AND FOG

Arsenal and Spurs Strained Sporting Spirit in Grim Struggle.

LONDON, January 4. —(Canadian Press Cable. — Despite fog in the North and floods in the West Country only one football league game was postponed on Saturday, the contest at Bristol between the Rovers and Charlton Athletic being rendered impossible due to Bristol's ground being under seven feet of water in places. Appropriately enough as far as weather was concerned was the deluge of goals that featured several of the games. Six were scored at Newcastle in the United's tilt with Bolton Wanderers; seven at Barnley between the home team and Oldham Athletic; six at Port Vale where Clapton Orient were defeated; seven at Northampton and ten at Swindon.

There were some fine individual performances, Gallacher of Newcastle (and late of Airdrieonians of the Scottish League) securing four out of the Tynesiders five, while Richardson of Swindon turned in a similar performance. Six other players throughout the league netted thrice for their clubs.

547,000 Saw Games.

Five hundred and forty seven thousand spectators braved the elements to witness the games and the largest crowd was present at the contest between Tottenham Hotspur and Arsenal, forty-five thousand turning out. The game ended in a draw and was a grim struggle all the way through. The bounds of sportsmanship were at times exceeded and considerable feeling was manifest between these two metropolitan clubs. Some arguments developed over the propriety of both goals scored However, the better of the game was in the hands of Arsenal for their backs and the Spurs forward line totally demoralized. This was accomplished by a successful exploitation of the new off-side rule.

Four drawn games featured the first string, while two teams, Aston Villa and Leicestter City, won away from hame. The victory of Birmingham over Sunderland was something not entirely expected, nor did the fans anticipate that Leicester City would gather in points at the expense of Liverpool, particularly by such a large margin.

One of the outstanding events of the play was the defeat of Wednesday by Fulham in the division. This was administered the tune of three to nothing and rise to misgiving on the part of observers with respect to Wednesday's chances for promotion. The form against Fulham was decidedly weak, and at no time did they look up a game that would justify their being put into the first string.

Swindon's Recovery.

A curious feature of third division play was the game where in Swindon Town overwhelmed Bournemouth by eight to two. Bournemouth had actually scored twice in the first five minutes of play, but thereafter Swindon took command of the proceeding and sent in their eight balls with eyes in rapid succession. Eight goals represented the score rang up by Aberdare against Watford, who secured a solitary counter.

They take quickly to this wholesome habit. One man notices another and soon all have discovered this new way of getting more pleasure out of smoking.

More and more smokers are doing the same thing. We wondered if you knew this about Life Savers, those little candy mints with the hole; how they freshen your mouth between smokes, soothe your nerves and make the next smoke taste so much better.

It's a fact: Life Savers easily double your smoke enjoyment. Their wonderful aromatic flavor makes your mouth like a good drink of water when you're really thirsty—and steady your nerves for the next play. Once you try them this way between smokes you'll always have a package handy.

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute. —Milton.

Do you believe in the scientific determination of destiny?

The Examiner has secured the services of a local expert in the science of drawing from a few basic facts a great amount of information that will be helpful and interesting to you. This gentleman, who for obvious reasons desires to remain anonymous under the pen-name "The Oracle", has made a deep study of the science. It is a fascinating study, founded on facts that no one can dispute. It is one of the oldest of the sciences, revived through much reading and application to ancient tables and writings.

And the knowledge of the ages is offered to Examiner readers free of all cost.

All You Must Do

is fill in the attached form and mail it to "The Oracle", The Examiner Office, 419 George street, Peterborough. Initials only will be used in The Examiner. If you desire a personal reply, enclose a stamped envelope.

Please note that full information can be based only on the complete particulars. Here is what is offered:

When full particulars are given:

The significance behind your name; paths to follow to secure success; how you must act to gain happiness; whether the date named is an auspicious one on which to take an important step; your particular color; where to apply your efforts and where you will best succeed.

Please Remember

Gracilis.—You are reserved and retired in manner, not making the most of your natural charm. You have high mentality, and would excel in science or business, and might accomplish much in the arts. Though your ideas do not fit in with the world as it is constituted today you must remember that your life is to be lived here and you must adjust yourself to conditions. Do not let anything come between you and the attainment of your ambitions. Your color is opal. You were born on a Wednesday. The day of which you enquire is past.

S. D. A. and B. N.—No, there was no response to my challenge to N. G. a few weeks ago. You remember that I gave him three days to claim the $100 if my reading of his somewhat strange character was not correct. In event of his failing to do so it was conceded that my reading was correct. He did not appear before the three days, or at all.

N. P. P.—You are not cut out for big individual achievements, but should carefully take the advice of others. You are gentle in manner and are developing charm that will endear you to many. Keep your temper sweet and look on the bright side of things. You are too young yet to have developed many traits fully. Your color is gray. You were born on a Tuesday. The day of which you enquire is a good one for travel.

T. B. O'.—I am glad that the information I gave you had so good results. It is not often that help proves its worth so quickly, as the development of the characteristics I advise takes time. In your case, you promptly took my advice, followed the lead I gave, and success followed. I am glad to have been of help to you, and pleased that you wrote to tell me. Here's wishing you more success in the New Year.

A. R.—You are not usually successful in controlling the affairs of others, and must be judicious in trying. You work better when in harness with someone else, to whose judgment you may appeal for confirmation of your opinions, which, by the way, are usually right. You are peace-loving and gentle, with charity toward all and holding no grudge against anyone. You are quickly adjustable to circumstances. Your characteristics show the influence of the arts, especially music, painting, and writing. Your birthdate characteristics show marriage, trust and confidence. You have the knack of beautifying whatever you work with, and can make a little improvement look like a wonderful achievement. You are courteous and amiable, and will have many real friends, but your affection is fixed on the members of your family. Your intuition is seldom wrong, but important decisions should not be taken without the application of logic. You were born on a Thursday. Your color is steel.

M. McA.—You are jolly and effervescent in company, but not really happy. You worry too much about un-essentials, and are neglecting the worth-while things. You have great skill with your hands, and a quick mentality; would excel as a stenographer, but lack the executive ability to gain success in business life. Cultivate a high regard for detail—it is trifles that make perfection. Cease troubling yourself about small matters, and save your resources for the big crises. Guard your heart well—do not let your natural pessimism rob you of happiness, but do not let yourself be carried off unawares. Your color is red. You were born on a Sunday, not Monday as stated.

Bobbed Hair.—You will succeed better by cleverness than by force, you must be diplomatic. You are vivacious and winning in personality, but inclined to talk a lot without much to say. Do not forget that a good listener is often more successful than a loud talker. You have great ability to meet the varying circumstances of daily life, and even adverse happenings do not despirit you. You rise above adversity by virtue of your abundant good spirits. You are deeply affectionate and have little ill-feeling in your make-up. Cultivate sympathy for others—not the clucking kind that says "I'm so sorry, I used to suffer a lot from that . . . ", but the kind that says, "What can I do?" and does it. You were born on a Tuesday, not Wednesday as stated. Your color is warm brown.

C. P. E.—You are quick-tempered and cause a lot of needless trouble by flying into a tantrum without just or reasonable cause. You lack self-control and have too much self-conceit. Your mentality is only average, and is not at all well developed. Restrain your impulses; don't quarrel; count a hundred before flying into a rage, and then don't do it at all. It is probable that the ill-health I see in your reading is caused by this habit—nothing ruins digestion like anger. Get The Examiner for last Thursday and tabulate your worth honestly—then govern your actions accordingly. You have mechanical skill, but have not shown sufficient interest to bring it to a paying basis. Your color is green. You were born on a Saturday.

Joe (J.C.).—You are able and efficient in your work, but not agressive enough for yourself to gain any great heights. Assert yourself, make others see your real worth; don't be content with mediocrity. You have real ability and mechanical skill. You are a lover of peace, but are not likely to take an insult without remonstration. You are worthy the greatest confidence; can keep a secret well; are kindly disposed to all the world. Do not allow yourself to drop into "puttering" around the house. Make use of your spare time in studying to improve your position. Life is kind to those who make their way to the top, but you know it has not much sympathy for the under-dog. Your color is heliotrope. You were born on a Tuesday.

M. M. R. —You gave no address for the private reply.

A. W. (Indian River).— and L. F. —You omitted your birth date.

Sob Sister — You gave no name. Reading cannot be given on pennames.

G. M. J. —You under rate your abilities and worth, and are content to occupy a minor postion when you are fitted mentally to manage. Make the most of your gifts; study your business from the executive viewpoint; look ahead of your job. If there is no room for advancement where you are, seek a wider field. You are more generous than affectionate. You are inclined to be melancholy and despondent. If this general condition arises from wrong habits of living, correct them; if from physical conditions, see a doctor. Your color is white. You were born on a Sunday.

M. D. M. —Your characteristics show that you will gain material success, but if you want big financial gains you must work for them. You are strong, active and creative mentally, but your vision is likely to be limited and your view self-centred. You will do well to examine your characteristics in the light of the chart given in the Examiner on Thursday last, and modify your actions accordingly. You possess good powers of observation, can judge men and things accurately without reasoning, but have found it not well to trust your intuition implicitly. You would be successful in business or in a calling demanding cleverness in detail and system. You appreciate good music and can differentiate between good and ill in painting. You are capable of deep affection, but will not show as much as you feel. Do not keep yourself so bottled up. Show your charm to the world. The day of which you enquire is one for thought. Do not force things, but let them take their natural course. Don't worry. You were born on a Saturday. Your color is flame, ranging from rose to gas blue. You can wear daring colours effectively.

T. E. E. —You have strong business characteristics and would be successful where knowledge of detail is required, coupled with some executive ability and great tact. You are diplomatic to a high degree, and have a depth of sympathy that fits you for nursing. Acting, writing, singing, and dancing and painting come easy to you, according to your inclination, and the fine arts have great influence on you. You should seek to anchor your affection as soon as possible, but be sure your love is fully reciprocated. If you wish to develop your rather deficient power to perceive analogies, study logic and metaphysics; learn the value of symbols and figures of speech, and use them in your conversation. You are exceedingly warm hearted, and will make many sacrifices for friends, but should guard your own interests more. You have a courageous spirit, and are not daunted by emergencies. Your birthday was on a Sunday. Your characteristics vibrate to no color, hence your keynoote is black the absence of color. The day of which you enquire is past. There are so many enquiries that is is impossible to have them printed within so short a time after receipt.

CRAZED FARMER SHOT WIFE AND THEN SUICIDED

Taunts of Neighbours and Quarrels at Home Believed Cause.

WAS OSTRACIZED.

Blamed For Death of Home Boy Who Received No Attention While Sick.

REGINA, Jan. 4. — (Canadian Press). — Believed half crazed by the taunts of his neighbors and maddened by disagreements at home, Geo. Ford, a well-known farmer of Broadview district, shot his wife with a shotgun Saturday afternoon and then turned the gun on himself, blowing his brains out.

The only eye-witness to the murder was Sonia Ford, a child of four years. On March 19, 1923, John Richard Boyns, a Barnardo boy employed by Ford, died of double pneumonia in the cellar of the farm house, where he lay on a cot during the period of his illness without any medical attention.

At the inquest held March 21, 1923, the jury gave a verdict that Boyns had died from double pneumonia owing to wilful neglect on the part of Ford, his employer. A storm of indignation arose against the Ford family. In the Broadview district where they farmed under the Soldiers' Settlement Board, so intense was the anger of the people that Ford and his wife were practically ostracized. This fact is believed to have been the underlying cause for the shooting Saturday.

NEW STORY TOLD OF LAST DAYS OF FORMER CZAR

Ekaterburg Man Gives Details of Plot to Rescue Family.

LETTER PUBLISHED.

Czar Wrote to Friends, Giving Details of House To Aid Rescuers.

MOSCOW, Jan. 4. (Canadian Press).—Over the signature of P. Yurintz, its Ekaterinburg correspondent, the Krasnaya Gazette, of Leningrad, publishes a new narrative of the last days of the former Russian Emperor and his family. The chief new element appears to be a letter purporting to have been written by the imprisoned Nicholas giving the expected rescuers details concerning the house in which his family were held so that their escape might be more easily effected.

The correspondent reveals an alleged attempt to rescue the Romanoffs from the windows of their prison home in Ekaterinburg during which the little Czarevitch was to have been given narcotics to prevent the possibility of his accidentally crying out and raising an alarm, thereby frustrating the exploit.

On the night of July 16, 1918, the former Emperor Nicholas Romanoff, his wife and his family were executed at Ekaterinburg.

SCOURGE AND HEROISM

By S. T. WILLIAMSON.

A mysterious, inexorable plague stalked the tropics for centuries. It knew no caste. It recognized neither rich nor poor, and against it the humble and the haughty, the strong and the weak were equally helpless. When it visited unhappy communities the democracy of death was revealed by freshly covered mounds of earth and by the gardens carried to these mounds in creaking carts.

Archaeologists attributed to this pestilence the downfall of prehistoric American civilizations. It was the scourge of primitive peoples, and at the same time their defense. Conquerors might enslave them, only to fall victims themselves to an all-conquering disease. Spaniards found it more dangerous than did the Aztecs, and many a slave trader met in it a righteous punishment.

A war was fought between two South American republics, and the pestilence swept a path like a tornado for hundreds of miles. Ships carried the plague. Soon after a vessel from the West Indies touched at Barcelona 30,000 people perished. A regiment returned from Cuba, and those who cheered it one week were dead the next.

This minotaur of the tropics demanded tribute from other temperate zones, too. Eight thousand died from the plague one year in New Orleans. Epidemics raged in the United States, as far north as Virginia—sometimes in Philadelphia and occasionally in Canada. Every year, as soon as hot weather came, the plague descended—so regularly that some declared it a visitation from God.

One European nation sought to wed two oceans in the tropics. Disease attacked the workmen, who fled, leaving the jungle vines to coil around the machinery. Few gamblers would be willing to run such chances as victims of this scourge played against death.

The unique feature of this disease was that as medical knowledge increased and science learned how to curb some scourges, the causes of the tropic pestilence became more mysterious than ever. The manner of its dissemination apparently violated every workable theory of germ transmission. It mattered little whether communities were clean or filthy; they were equally susceptible.

Persons could be exposed to sufferers from the pestilence. They could drink from the same glasses, wear the same clothes, sleep in the same bed. Every means could be employed that, in other epidemic diseases, would be certain to result in infection. More often than not the exposed persons did not succumb.

On the other hand, some one, hundreds of feet away, who had never come in contact with sufferers from the plague would fall a victim. All the sailors sleeping one one side of a ship might be taken, while those in bunks just across the fo'castle might be seemingly immune. There was no prediction as to where the plague might break out next. Like some unseen lottery, it picked its victims.

All these peculiarities were studied by surgeons in the army of a young republic that had forced from Spain the last of her colonies. For every Spanish bullet that found a mark, ten American soldiers fell from disease in Cuba. A few months after an army of occupation had settled on the island the dreaded plague appeared in camps and in barracks.

Four surgeons were detailed to investigate the causes. Twenty years before, a Cuban physician had offered the theory that a certain insect spread the disease; but none would accept his theory. The army doctors experimented with these insects. Two of the investigators caught the plague, and one died in convulsions.

It was apparent that they were on the right track for solution, but still the Cuban physician's theory had not been proved conclusively. Animals seemed to be immune. The only way to test the theory was on human beings. Volunteers were called for.

The first to offer themselves were two privates. They were told that they would probably die. The Major of the Medical Corps in charge of the experiments explained the danger involved and told the soldiers that they would be paid for the sacrifice. The men declined the reward. The Major's wrist and forearm straightened and his fingers, touched the visor of his cap. "Gentlemen," he said, "I salute you."

Thus those who thought they were about to die were saluted. The volunteers were exposed to insects that had bitten victims of the plague, and in a few days they showed the familiar symptoms of the disease. Other volunteers were put in a hut divided by screens. In one compartment were insects infected with the scourge. In the other were none.

Occupants of the first compartment caught the disease. Those in the same building, but separated from the first group only by screens, were unaffected. It was definitely proved that the plague is transmitted by a certain insect that first has bitten a sufferer and then alights on other persons.

With this established, it was only a question of time before the plague was conquered. In six weeks Havana, which for years had been a pest hole, did not have a single case. Now this disease is almost never encountered.

The volunteers did not die, but a few months later the Major in charge of the work died from other causes. Almost his last words were: "I leave my wife and daughter so little."

Twenty-five years ago, in Cuba, Privates John R. Kissinger and John J. Moran of the United States Army offered themselves to be experimented upon by a commission of army surgeons endeavoring to find the causes of yellow fever. It was shown that the fever is transmitted by the bite of a certain variety of mosquito. This theory was first set forth in 1881 by Dr. Carlos Finlay of Havana.

"MADAME BEHAVE" THIRD CHRISTIE COMEDY THIS YEAR BREAKS RECORD.

Farcical Production Featuring Julian Eltinge and Ann Pennington, Is of the Finest Type.

One big picture a year—an outstanding production—that is the record of mst producing companies. But Al Christie, producer of high-grade comedies, has broken this record of most producing companies. "Madam Behave," a comedy featuring Julian Eltinge and Ann Pennington, which will have its premiere showing at the Regent Theatre to-day, he has given to the motion picture public three superb comedies, namely, "Charley's Aunt," "Seven Days" and his Americanized version of Jean Arlette's celebrated French farce, which has held the stage with great success for several years past.

"Madam Behave" is a mirth-provoker of the finest type. The story deals with the efforts of a young architect, impersonated by Mr. Eltinge, to win the affection of Gwen Townley, a delicious comedy part played by Miss Pennington. They are interfered with by a pair of old Lotharios who seek to find and marry a missing woman, "Madam Brown," and when by force of circumstances, the young architect is obliged to assume the character of the woman, and finds himself the object of the persistent wooing of the two men, many laughable situations ensue. The climax is said to be as novel as it is amusing.

"Madam Behave" is said to be a cousin of "Charley's Aunt," which enjoyed and still enjoys, widespread popular favor. Every role is in the hands of a capable screen comedian, the result being film entertainment of the best grade. As a young architect who assumes the disguise of "Madam Behave" Mr. Eltinge is ideally cast and with the captivating young comedienne Ann Pennington playing opposite him, the action never lags.

INSIDE GOLF.

By CHESTER HORTON

Mentor of 21 Golf Champions. "Golf's most successful teacher," says "Chick" Evans

The more power factors you put to work in the golf swing the more you increase the danger of one of them going wrong. That is why it is such an exact proposition to get the power factors working together, yet it is comparatively easy to line them up. The golfer who worries about his hips and knees and feet will probably get into trouble. They are details, but subordinate to arm and shoulder and wrist action. The golf swing is 95 per cent "above the wrist," and I don't know but what it might be called 100 per cent that, since we might say it is all in the head. However, the full pivot is needed for the very necessary long ball off the tee or fairway, and what I seek to do is simplify this by indicating to the player how he can narrow it down to one simple exertion—that of merely turning his shoulders, by shoving the left shoulder, until the left shoulder points directly to the ball. That is the pivot, and the hips and knees have nothing to do with it. (Copyright, Chester Horton, 1925 —reproduction in any form strictly prohibited).

CONFERENCE TO HAVE NO RESULT

Operators and Miners Look For Week of Futile Negotiations.

STARTING TO-DAY.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4. —(United Press). — Anthracite operators and miners' leaders returning today from the hard coal region, looked forward to a week of extended but futile negotiations toward ending the strike now in its fifth month. A spokesman for President John L. Lewis at his hotel here said that while he foresaw no immediate break-up when the conferers should meet to-morrow at the Union League Club the prospect of a settlement were as remote as when the New Year's recess was taken last Thursday.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

Theatre

AT THE GRAND

The sparkle and smartness of the imperishable lyrics and music of the delightful old Gilbert and Sullivan operetta 'The Mikado" has lost none of their original appeal in the presentation by the company to be presented by Brandon Brothers at the Grand Opera House tonight.

The audience of music lovers may anticipate genuine appreciation of the vocal ability of the artists as well as the huge delight in the piquant satire and ingratiating melody that combine to make "The Mikado" one of the most enjoyable of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

Every one of the famous Gilbertian characters is faithfully represented by an artist of ability, while the costuming and settings are rich and true to the period of the story. The singing, of course is the outstanding merit of the performance. Principals and chorus are all voices of exceptional richness and power and every one of the old gems are made to live again and are usually encored insistently. The company is composed of fresh, young vigorous voices and the director has injected pep and dash into the performance

WEDDING BELLS.

GORDON—FORSYTHE.

At the Sacred Heart Rectory on January 2nd, the wedding of Violet Amelia Forsythe and William Isidore Gordon was quietly solemnized by the Rev. J. J. O'Brien.

GROBB—EVANS.

ST. CATHARINES, Jan. 4.—The marriage is announced at St. Paul's Church, Chicago, by the Rev. George H. Thomas, assisted by Hon. Jesse Holdom, of Nina, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Evans, of Wisconsin, to Rev. Roy Braund Grobb, M.A., son of James A. Grobb, St. Catharines.

DE LAPLANTE—TURCOTTE.

A quiet but pretty Yuletide wedding was solemnized at eight o'clock on Saturday morning at the Sacred Heart Church by the Rev. Father J. O'Brien, when Lena Vitoliene, daughter of Mrs. Josephine Turcotte, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Henry William, son of Mr. and Mrs. De Laplante, Lansdowne Street. The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother Jack, looked winsome in her costume of smoked grey flat crepe trimmed with rose cut velvet, stockings to match, and wore a black velvet hat with gold, carrying a shower bouquet. She was assisted by the groom's niece, Marion Rishea, of Toronto, dressed in peacock blue flat crepe with gunmetal stockings and velvet shoes. Her bouquet was pink carnations. The best man was Mr. Thomas John De Laplante, brother of the groom. During the Mass, which was served by Gordon De Laplante and Albert Guerin, relatives of the groom, appropriate solos were rendered by Mrs. Herman De Laplante and Mrs. David Brioux of Toronto. Immediately after the guests repaired to the groom's home.

After the wedding breakfast was served the usual toasts were proposed. The bride changed to her travelling costume, being a navy blue tricotine ensemble trimmed with silver grey fox, and silver hat with orange. Later they left for a brief honeymoon, to take up their home in Toronto. As a testimony to the popularity of the bridal pair, they were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts.

Gold Shares Were Strong But Silver Stocks Fell

TORONTO, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press.)—More than half a million shares was the turnover on the Standard Mining Exchange during the year's first session this morning. Golds were uniformly strong and some substantial advances were recorded in heavy trading, but silvers were almost as consistently weak. Consolidated West Dome Lake, in which the dealings amounted almost to eighty thousand shares, Argonaut and Baldwin were the leaders in volume. Argonaut advanced 1 3-4 at 17 3-4. Baldwin improved an eighth at 2 1-2. Goldale advanced two, Teck Hughes 16 to 279, Vipond five to 166, Kirkland Lake 2 1-2 and Tough Oakes reached 56. Beaver, Mining Corporation and Nipissing were strong spots among the silvers, while Capitol, Keeley and Crown Reserve were among the weaker ones.

Market Firm and Active With Tractions Prominent

TORONTO, Jan. 4.— (Canadian Press.)—The market was firm and very active during the morning session of the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day, Tractions being particularly prominent. Brazilian, the active leader, sold up to 83 3-4, then receded to 83 1-4 at the morning close for a net gain of a quarter point. Twin City and Winnipeg both sold higher during the session, but the former closed unchanged at 79 1-4 and Winnipeg a half point lower at 48. Consolidated Smelters, second to Brazilian in volume of transactions, was sold up to 182, from which it eased a point, the close at 181 representing a one point advance. Canadian Canners issues were active, the preferred gaining a point at 67 and the common and bonds strengthening slightly.

Wheat Price Swings Upward On Reports Of Heavy Rain

CHICAGO, January 4. Canadian Press. — With Liverpool quotations showing an unexpected advance, the wheat market here took an early swing upward to-day. A liberal decrease in the amount of wheat on the ocean passage attracted notice and so did reports of unwelcome further rains in Argentine as well as serious floods in western Europe.

Buying in Chicago was of a general character, opening prices 2¼ to 3 3-4 higher new style, May 1.81½ to 182 3-4 and July 155 were followed by something of a set back and then by fresh upturns.

Corn and oats were firmer, sympathizing with wheat strength, despite the large receipts of corn here, 1148 cars. After opening ½ to 1 1-8 up May 87 to 87½ the corn market receded somewhat. Oats started unchanged to 3-8 higher, May 45 3-4 to 46 and then scored a moderate advance all around. In line with hog values the provision market was easy.

By Giving the Eyes Needed Attention

Many a person has increased the volume and value of his work. When this result is so easy to secure and when the rewards are so sure, isn't it surprising that so many neglect their eyes? But tens of thousands of folks at this minute are below par in efficiency just because their eyes do not function as they should. We can help such people.

BRITISH PAPER SEES NO CHANCE OF CANADA OR OTHER DOMINIONS SIGNING LOCARNO TREATIES SOON

Guardian Says French-Canadians Might Fear War With France.

SERIOUS MISGIVINGS.

Breaking Up of Empire Unity Feared in Some Quarters.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—The Manchester Guardian, referring to the Locarno Security Pact, says there is no likelihood of Canada signing the treaty for the time being, and adds that it could hardly be otherwise, as the French-Canadians could not be expected to sign any document which, however remotely, bound them to the possibility of war with France.

There is no certainty, either, The Guardian continues, that other Dominions, which are free from this particular racial difficulty are any more anxious to sign. The paper recalls that ex-Premier Smuts of South Africa, nearly two months ago, expressed most serious misgivings, lest the Locarno pact should tend to break up the unity of the Empire.

"The danger, of course," The Guardian says, "is that the Dominions may come to feel that they have had so slight a part in the conduct of British foreign policy, that they cannot be held morally responsible for its constituent parts. By definitely excluding them from the Locarno obligations, we seem rather to hasten this development, yet the Locarno Pact is based primarily upon the League of Nations Covenant to which the Dominions are attached as warmly as Great Britain."

LONG SEARCH BY POLICE LOCATES ROBERT B. SCOTT

Serving Sentence in San Quentin Prison as John Redding.

WANTED FOR MURDER.

Brother of Russell Scott Who Escaped Gallows in Chicago.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press)—Robert B. Scott, sought by the Chicago police in connection with the murder of Joseph Maurer, drug store clerk, for which his brother, Russell Scott, was convicted and sent to an Illinois insane asylum, is serving a sentence at San Quentin Prison for robbery under the name of John Redding, prison authorities said yesterday.

Scott's identification was made by Chicago police, who advised California authorities that Redding is the man for whom they have conducted a nation-wide search.

The identification was made after the man known as Redding had been granted a Christmas parole for good conduct. He had no job to go to, however, and the parole was not made effective. The parole now is indefinitely held up, pending action by Illinois officials.

Redding was sent to San Quentin for the robbery of a haberdashery store in San Francisco in 1924.

The murder charge against Robert B. Scott was based on allegations of his brother, Russell, who asserted at his trial in Chicago that Robert killed Maurer.

The Russell Scott case ended in a death sentence but an eleventh hour reprieve saved him from the gallows. He later was found insane.

Society Girl Marries Popular Song Writer

NEW YORK, January 5. Canadian Press. — Irving Berlin, a Russian immigrant and a former Bowery saloon waiter, who later became a popular song writer, and producer of revues, was married yesterday to Miss Ellen Mackay, daughter of Clarence H. Mackay, head of the Postal Telegraph Company, by Deputy City Clerk, McCormick, in the municipal buildings.

When informed of the marriage Mr. Mackay, who is a prominent layman in the Roman Catholic church, issued a statement, asserting that the wedding was "a complete surprise, and was without my knowledge or consent. Beyond that I have nothing to say."

Three years ago Miss Mackay, who is now 22 years old, made her debut in society. In a recent magazien article Miss Mackay said that society girls were frequenting cabarets because they wanted privacy from the unattractive people often found in society. Berlin gave his age as 37 years.

Nightgown Makers Slack Pyjamas Are Too Popular

BELFAST, Ireland, Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press).—Londonderry's pajama industry is booming, but the nightgown manufacturers are in despair because of woman's growing fondness for the bifurcated sleeping garment.

BRITISH TERMS TO ITALY EASY

Very Little Stiffer Than Those Given By United States.

HOLDING GOLD.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—The terms Great Britain proposes to Italy for the settlement of the Italian debt to this country are only a little stiffer than those accorded Rome by the United States Finance Minister Volpi, who negotiated the United States settlement is coming here the end of the week. Great Britain demands 9,000,000 pounds a year for 62 years for a debt of 570,000,000 pounds. The United States got 6,000,000 pounds a year for a debt of 398,000,000 pounds, but Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill refused to return the gold deposited here by Italy during the war as security for the loans.

C.N.R. TO ABANDON "BACK LINE" FROM OMEMEE TO MILLBROOK

Officials Promise Deputation To Continue Service For Thirty Days.

OPERATED AT LOSS.

LINDSAY, Jan. 5.—Will the C.N.R. abandon the old "back line" as it is commonly called, running from Omemee to Millbrook via Bethany? Railway men in Lindsay believe that this is to be the fate of the old stretch of the Midland Railway, which was the route to Port Hope before the Missing Link section was constructed between Peterboro and Lindsay.

The announcement that the C.N.R. would discontinue the Lindsay-Port Hope train over this route came like a bolt from the blue to the business men of Lindsay and also the residents of Manvers township who do their business here. As a result of the announcement a meeting was held on New Year's eve in the C.N.R. station when a deputation from the Board of Trade and residents of Manvers met General Superintendent Bond, of Montreal, R. L. Fairbairn, Gen. Pass Agent, Toronto, and Superintendent McMillan, of Belleville. As a result of the conference the officials agreed to continue the train for thirty days more

This service has not been paying the C.N.R. for some time, and it is also stated that the Bethany line is being operated at a loss, and rather than go to the expense of improving the roadbed, laying heavier steel, building new bridges, culverts, etc., the management is likely to abandon the line.

Bethany and other points in Manvers are also being served by the C.N.R. Port McNicholl line.

Carol Must Find Money For Own Bills In Future

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—King Ferdinand and Queen Marie, as parents of the former Crown Prince Carol, will pay all the debts he contracted prior to his renunciation of the succession of rights to the throne, but he will have to find money to foot his own bills hereafter. This was the substance of an announcement made public today.

The official Gazette today promulgated the renunciation Acts adopted yesterday by the National Assembly and also announced that Prince Nicolas has been appointed a Captain in the army.

MURDER CHARGE AGAINST SISTER

Margaret McPhail Before the Magistrate at Drumheller January 8th.

BROTHER SHOT.

CALGARY, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press.—In jail here, Margaret McPhail is awaiting preliminary hearing on a charge of murdering her brother, Alexander McPhail, a homesteader, who was shot and killed on the night of December 17. The hearing will be held at Drumheller, probably on Friday, Jan. 8.

Considerable mystery surrounds the death of McPhail. The brother and sister, residing in separate houses, lived on the lonely homestead, which is located on the Hope lease, some distance from Drumheller. First reports were that he had committed suicide, but at the inquest the jury brought in a verdict of murder "by person or persons unknown." At the inquest, Miss McPhail said she did not hear the fatal shots, but was attracted to her brother's house by the barking of a dog. There she found the man suffering from two bullet wounds and in a dying condition. She immediately sought help, so she told the jury, the McPhail was dead when medical aid arrived.

CHICKEN THEFT SHOWN IN SNOW

Provincial Constable Maker Follows Trail and Catches Two Youths.

FOWL FOUND.

Two youths visited a North Monaghan poultry yard, the property of Sidney Rendell, and stole six chickens. Unfortunately, for their own safety, they left a plain trail which Provincial Constable N. F. Maker followed easily through the snow. He was able to distinguish where the bag containing the poultry had been lifted over the fence and deposited on the other side.

The chickens were found running at large in a place available to one of the youths, and Constable Maker said they were going to be apportioned later. The two young men were apprehended and appeared this morning in Police Court.

SIR BASIL THOMPSON GUILTY OF MISCONDUCT WITH WOMAN SAYS MAGISTRATE; FINE $25

Former Scotland Yard Official Declares He Was Gathering Information and Impressions For New Book — Gave Woman Two or Three Shillings.

FORMER CHANCELLOR OF EXCHEQUER AND A VICE ADMIRAL GAVE EVIDENCE

Literary Work Would Deal With Communism, Hyde Park and Solicitation in the West End, Accused Said —Police Rushed in and Spoiled Interview.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press)—Sir Basil Thompson, former Scotland Yard official, was convicted today of a charge of misconduct with a woman in Hyde Park and fined five pounds. The same amount in costs was assessed. A notice that appeal would be taken was entered.

Sir Basil was merely gathering data for literary work when arrested in Hyde Park on December 11th for alleged misconduct with a woman, it was testified on his behalf in police court today.

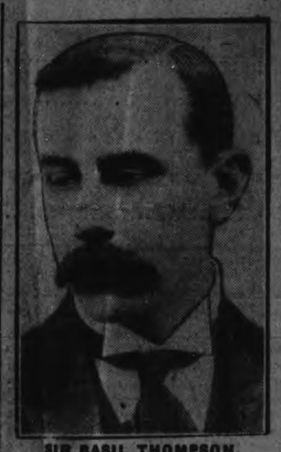
After cross examination of police witnesses by the prosecution the magistrate elicited the statement that Sir Basil had not protested against arrest while at the police station, defendant's counsel, Sir Henry R. Curtis Bennett declared.

The reason that Sir Basil was in Hyde Park was that he was engaged in literary work. He would bring witnesses who knew of Sir Basil's intentions to write about communism, Hyde Park and solicitation in the west end generally, and to get his material by visiting the park at night.

Reginald McKenna, former chancellar of the exchequer, and vice admiral Sir Reginald Hall gave evidence regarding Sir Basil's character, after which the defendant himself entered the witness box.

He confirmed his counsel's statement that he was in the park to gather material on communism as he had been informed that a man he wanted to hear would speak there. On the way he was accosted by a woman, and sat down with her to get material for his book.

After some conversation, she complained that she was in need of money, and he gave her two or three shillings from his waistcoat pocket,



SIR BASIL THOMPSON,
Former Director of Intelligence at Scotland Yard.

whereupon the constables rushed up and announced their intention of arresting them for indecency. Sir Basil declared the constables' charges were untrue.

New Staff, Including Foreman, Started on Monday Morning.

NO DISORDER.

Substitutes Recruited From Peterboro, Renfrew and Other Places.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 5. — About 25 of the spinners employed in the mills of the Campbellford Cloth Company failed to report for work on Saturday last although it is alleged, that they had been notified that they would be expected to show up. They were accordingly notified that their services would no longer be required.

New spinners to take the places of the locked out employees were brought in from Renfrew, Peterborough, Toronto and Brantford and the mills started up Monday morning with practically a full force in this department, including a new foreman. Two policemen were stationed at the gate of the plant when work started Monday but there was no disorder. Although the old employees were on hand they were not admitted except to secure their personal belongings.

BANDITS STEAL MILLION IN SILK

Three Hundred Entered a Chinese City and Disarmed Garrison.

USED LAUNCHES.

By Alfred G. Hicks
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

HONG KONG, Jan. 5. — Three hundred bandits to-day, by a daring trick, perpetrated the biggest silk robbery in the history of South China, when they raided Yungkee City and took $1,000,000 worth of silk. After disarming the troops in the city, they donned the soldiers' uniforms and deceived the volunteer police by declaring they were the "new garrison" for the place. In this way they were able to take possession of thirty warehouses, from which they removed the silk to launches and escaped.

GOVERNOR SAYS OPPOSITION TO WATERWAY FROM SEABOARD

Christianson, of Minnesota, Says Propaganda is Ungenerous.

BUILT UP BY WEST.

Eastern Ports Have Grown on Wealth of Middle West.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 5 (Canadian Press) — Governor Theodore Christianson of Minnesota today charged that "propaganda" against the development of the water route which would link the middle western states with the eastern seaports emanates from the Atlantic seaboard Halifax or New York. Governor Christianson's views were given in an address to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence tidewater congress. He characterized the "propaganda" as "ungenerous," and as emanating from "the octupus of the Atlantic seaboard whose wealth and importance have been built up largely from contributions of people of mid-continent"

Pneumonia In Washington Ascribed To Coal Shortage

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. — A sharp increase in the number of pneumonia cases in Washington is attributed by health officers to a shortage of coal.

Dr. William C. Fowler, District Health Officer, said the disease had been unusually prevalent since autumn, but that in the last ten days the number of victims had taken a big jump upward.

Suspension of work in the anthracite fields, he said, had caused many families to economize on coal for heating, while others had no coal at all.

There were six more deaths from pneumonia last week than in the corresponding week a year ago.

Her attempt at suicide took place in an apartment where she had been living during a cabaret engagement here. Her son Russell Thaw was with her at the time.

REGULAR AND "GINGER" GROUPS OF PROGRESSIVE PARTY CONFER TRYING TO REACH COMMON BASIS

All Members Reticent as to Exact Nature of Deliberations.

HAVE ONE OBJECT.

Can Do More By Working Together, says One Member.

OTTAWA, Jan. 3 (Canadian Press).—Main line Progressives and members of the so-called "ginger group" Progressives met Robert Forke, the Progressive leader, this morning to discuss plans for the session. One of the main purposes of the meeting, it is understood, was an endeavor to reach a common basis for action as between all Progressives.

The Progressives attending today's conference were reticent as to the exact nature of the deliberations but the conference is understood to be largely a continuance of the conferences of last session.

"The Progressives have a common object," said one Progressive to-day, "and it is felt that more would be accomplished by working on a common basis than by working apart."

Mr. Forke was non-committal as to the stand of the Progressives in the coming session, except to say, "We do not intend to fall into the lap of either party."

Dean Refuses To Marry Girls' 'Disfigured' By Paint

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—A crusade against the British approaching the altar with heavily powdered faces and painted lips has been started by Rev. Arthur Wells, Dean of a fashionable church. Although other and equally fashionable churches of the metropolis contain several rooms in which the bride may carry out cosmetic decorations, Dean Wells asserts that he will not marry any woman so "disfigured."

The Dean has not performed a marriage ceremony for several weeks.

THE WEATHER.

The weather conditions during the past few days partake of the nature of a "January thaw," but are hardly pronounced enough to be the genuine article. Yesterday's highest was 35 degrees; lowest 15 degrees. Last year at this date similar conditions prevailed, but were succeeded during the later half of the month by some very severe weather. A little colder to-night or to-morrow.—W. P.

BELGIUM'S LOSS IS FOUR MILLION

Twelve Known Dead Besides Heavy Property Loss From Flood.

MAY BE MORE.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Belgium to-day began the melancholy task of counting the losses from the worst flood the little country has experienced since 1740. While it will be days before the extent of the damage can be assessed with any degree of accuracy, the most conservative estimates place it well above 100,000,000 francs (about $4,500,000). Twelve persons are known to be dead, and it is feared this figure will be increased when reports arrive from those districts now isolated.

Warehouse on Bay Street, Toronto, Injured To Extent of $45,000.

COMBUSTION.

TORONTO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Fire, thought to have started from spontaneous combustion, last night on the fourth floor of a five-storey brick building at 226 Bay Street, caused damage estimated at $45,000 to the building and stock of the different firms in the place.

Shortly after the outbreak was discovered an explosion occurred on the fourth floor, which shook the building and blew the plate glass window in front of the premises on the first floor half-way across Bay Street. A number of persons walking north on the east side of Bay Street were struck by pieces of shattered window.

The fourth storey is tenanted by John A. Chandler, manufacturers' agent. A number of films and combs were stocked in the flat, and they are said to have caused the explosion and dense smoke. Firemen, however, managed to confine the blaze to this floor. Water running from this floor caused heavy damage to the contents of the two floors below.

BRITISH PAPER SEES NO CHANCE OF CANADA OR OTHER DOMINIONS SIGNING LOCARNO TREATIES SOON

Guardian Says French-Canadians Might Fear War With France.

SERIOUS MISGIVINGS.

Breaking Up of Empire Unity Feared in Some Quarters.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—The Manchester Guardian, referring to the Locarno Security Pact, says there is no likelihood of Canada signing the treaty for the time being, and adds that it could hardly be otherwise, as the French-Canadians could not be expected to sign any document which, however remotely, bound them to the possibility of war with France.

There is no certainty, either, The Guardian continues, that other Dominions, which are free from this particular racial difficulty are any more anxious to sign. The paper recalls that ex-Premier Smuts of South Africa, nearly two months ago, expressed most serious misgivings, lest the Locarno pact should tend to break up the unity of the Empire.

"The danger, of course," The Guardian says, "is that the Dominions may come to feel that they have had so slight a part in the conduct of British foreign policy, that they cannot be held morally responsible for its constituent parts. By definitely excluding them from the Locarno obligations, we seem rather to hasten this development, yet the Locarno Pact is based primarily upon the League of Nations Covenant to which the Dominions are attached as warmly as Great Britain."

LONG SEARCH BY POLICE LOCATES ROBERT B. SCOTT

Serving Sentence in San Quentin Prison as John Redding.

WANTED FOR MURDER.

Brother of Russell Scott Who Escaped Gallows in Chicago.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press)—Robert B. Scott, sought by the Chicago police in connection with the murder of Joseph Maurer, drug store clerk, for which his brother, Russell Scott, was convicted and sent to an Illinois insane asylum, is serving a sentence at San Quentin Prison for robbery under the name of John Redding, prison authorities said yesterday.

Scott's identification was made by Chicago police, who advised California authorities that Redding is the man for whom they have conducted a nation-wide search.

The identification was made after the man known as Redding had been granted a Christmas parole for good conduct. He had no job to go to, however, and the parole was not made effective. The parole now is indefinitely held up, pending action by Illinois officials.

Redding was sent to San Quentin for the robbery of a haberdashery store in San Francisco in 1924.

The murder charge against Robert B. Scott was based on allegations of his brother, Russell, who asserted at his trial in Chicago that Robert killed Maurer.

The Russell Scott case ended in a death sentence but an eleventh hour reprieve saved him from the gallows. He later was found insane.

Society Girl Marries Popular Song Writer

NEW YORK, January 5. Canadian Press. — Irving Berlin, a Russian immigrant and a former Bowery saloon waiter, who later became a popular song writer, and producer of revues, was married yesterday to Miss Ellen Mackay, daughter of Clarence H. Mackay, head of the Postal Telegraph Company, by Deputy City Clerk, McCormick, in the municipal buildings.

When informed of the marriage Mr. Mackay, who is a prominent layman in the Roman Catholic church, issued a statement, asserting that the wedding was "a complete surprise, and was without my knowledge or consent. Beyond that I have nothing to say."

Three years ago Miss Mackay, who is now 22 years old, made her debut in society. In a recent magazien article Miss Mackay said that society girls were frequenting cabarets because they wanted privacy from the unattractive people often found in society. Berlin gave his age as 37 years.

Nightgown Makers Slack Pyjamas Are Too Popular

BELFAST, Ireland, Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press).—Londonderry's pajama industry is booming, but the nightgown manufacturers are in despair because of woman's growing fondness for the bifurcated sleeping garment.

Another effect of fashion's fickleness is seen in the closing of a Londonderry corset factory, throwing 200 girls out of employment.

BRITISH TERMS TO ITALY EASY

Very Little Stiffer Than Those Given By United States.

HOLDING GOLD.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—The terms Great Britain proposes to Italy for the settlement of the Italian debt to this country are only a litle stiffer than those accorded Rome by the United States Finance Minister Volpi, who negotiated the United States settlement is coming here the end of the week. Great Britain demands 9,000,000 pounds a year for 62 years for a debt of 570,000,000 pounds. The United States got 6,000,000 pounds a year for a debt of 398,000,000 pounds, but Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill refused to return the gold deposited here by Italy during the war as security for the loans.

C.N.R. TO ABANDON "BACK LINE" FROM OMEMEE TO MILLBROOK

Carol Must Find Money For Own Bills In Future

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—King Ferdinand and Queen Marie, as parents of the former Crown Prince Carol, will pay all the debts he contracted prior to his renunciation of the succession of rights to the throne, but he will have to find money to foot his own bills hereafter. This was the substance of an announcement made public today.

The official Gazette today promulgated the renunciation Acts adopted yesterday by the National Assembly and also announced that Prince Nicolas has been appointed a Captain in the army.

Officials Promise Deputation To Continue Service For Thirty Days.

OPERATED AT LOSS.

LINDSAY, Jan. 5.—Will the C.N.R. abandon the old "back line" as it is commonly called, running from Omemee to Millbrook via Bethany? Railway men in Lindsay believe that this is to be the fate of the old stretch of the Midland Railway, which was the route to Port Hope before the Missing Link section was constructed between Peterboro and Lindsay.

The announcement that the C.N.R. would discontinue the Lindsay-Port Hope train over this route came like a bolt from the blue to the business men of Lindsay and also the residents of Manvers township who do their business here. As a result of the announcement a meeting was held on New Year's eve in the C.N.R. station when a deputation from the Board of Trade and residents of Manvers met General Superintendent Bond, of Montreal, R. L. Fairbairn, Gen. Pass Agent, Toronto, and Superintendent McMillan, of Belleville. As a result of the conference the officials agreed to continue the train for thirty days more

This service has not been paying the C.N.R. for some time, and it is also stated that the Bethany line is being operated at a loss, and rather than go to the expense of improving the roadbed, laying heavier steel, building new bridges, culverts, etc., the management is likely to abandon the line.

Bethany and other points in Manvers are also being served by the C.N.R. Port McNicholl line.

MURDER CHARGE AGAINST SISTER

Margaret McPhail Before the Magistrate at Drumheller January 8th.

BROTHER SHOT.

CALGARY, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press.—In jail here, Margaret McPhail is awaiting preliminary hearing on a charge of murdering her brother, Alexander McPhail, a homesteader, who was shot and killed on the night of December 17. The hearing will be held at Drumheller, probably on Friday, Jan. 8.

Considerable mystery surrounds the death of McPhail. The brother and sister, residing in separate houses, lived on the lonely homestead, which is located on the Hope lease, some distance from Drumheller. First reports were that he had committed suicide, but at the inquest the jury brought in a verdict of murder "by person or persons unknown." At the inquest, Miss McPhail said she did not hear the fatal shots, but was attracted to her brother's house by the barking of a dog. There she found the man suffering from two bullet wounds and in a dying condition. She immediately sought help, so she told the jury, the McPhail was dead when medical aid arrived.

CHICKEN THEFT SHOWN IN SNOW

FOWL FOUND.

Two youths visited a North Monaghan poultry yard, the property of Sidney Rendell, and stole six chickens. Unfortunately, for their own safety, they left a plain trail which Provincial Constable N. F. Maker followed easily through the snow. He was able to distinguish where the bag containing the poultry had been lifted over the fence and deposited on the other side.

The chickens were found running at large in a place available to one of the youths, and Constable Maker said they were going to be apportioned later. The two young men were apprehended and appeared this morning in Police Court.

SIR BASIL THOMPSON GUILTY OF MISCONDUCT WITH WOMAN SAYS MAGISTRATE; FINE $25

Former Scotland Yard Official Declares He Was Gathering Information and Impressions For New Book — Gave Woman Two or Three Shillings.

FORMER CHANCELLOR OF EXCHEQUER AND A VICE ADMIRAL GAVE EVIDENCE

Literary Work Would Deal With Communism, Hyde Park and Solicitation in the West End, Accused Said —Police Rushed in and Spoiled Interview.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press)—Sir Basil Thompson, former Scotland Yard official, was convicted today of a charge of misconduct with a woman in Hyde Park and fined five pounds. The same amount in costs was assessed. A notice that appeal would be taken was entered.

Sir Basil was merely gathering data for literary work when arrested in Hyde Park on December 11th for alleged misconduct with a woman, it was testified on his behalf in police court today.

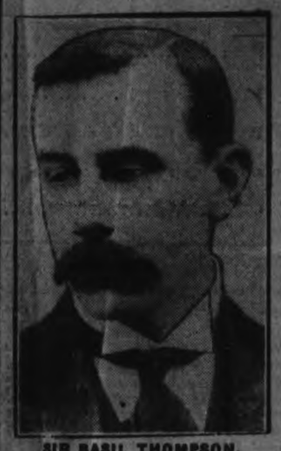
After cross examination of police witnesses by the prosecution the magistrate elicited the statement that Sir Basil had not protested against arrest while at the police station, defendant's counsel, Sir Henry R. Curtis Bennett declared.

The reason that Sir Basil was in Hyde Park was that he was engaged in literary work. He would bring witnesses who knew of Sir Basil's intentions to write about communism, Hyde Park and solicitation in the west end generally, and to get his material by visiting the park at night.

Reginald McKenna, former chancellar of the exchequer, and vice admiral Sir Reginald Hall gave evidence regarding Sir Basil's character, after which the defendant himself entered the witness box.

He confirmed his counsel's statement that he was in the park to gather material on communism as he had been informed that a man he wanted to hear would speak there. On the way he was accosted by a woman, and sat down with her to get material for his book.

After some conversation, she complained that she was in need of money, and he gave her two or three shillings from his waistcoat pocket,



SIR BASIL THOMPSON,
Former Director of 'Intelligence at Scotland Yard.

whereupon the constables rushed up and announced their intention of arresting them for indecency. Sir Basil declared the constables' charges were untrue.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 5. — About 25 of the spinners employed in the mills of the Campbellford Cloth Company failed to report for work on Saturday last although it is alleged, that they had been notified that they would be expected to show up. They were accordingly notified that their services would no longer be required.

New spinners to take the places of the locked out employees were brought in from Renfrew, Peterborough, Toronto and Brantford and the mills started up Monday morning with practically a full force in this department, including a new foreman. Two policemen were stationed at the gate of the plant when work started Monday but there was no disorder. Although the old employees were on hand they were not admitted except to secure their personal belongings.

Three Hundred Entered a Chinese City and Disarmed Garrison.

USED LAUNCHES.

By Alfred G. Hicks
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

HONG KONG, Jan. 5. — Three hundred bandits to-day, by a daring trick, perpetrated the biggest silk robbery in the history of South China, when they raided Yungkee City and took $1,000,000 worth of silk. After disarming the troops in the city, they donned the soldiers' uniforms and deceived the volunteer police by declaring they were the "new garrison" for the place. In this way they were able to take possession of thirty warehouses, from which they removed the silk to launches and escaped.

GOVERNOR SAYS OPPOSITION TO WATERWAY FROM SEABOARD

Christianson, of Minnesota, Says Propaganda is Ungenerous.

BUILT UP BY WEST.

Eastern Ports Have Grown on Wealth of Middle West.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 5 (Canadian Press) — Governor Theodore Christianson of Minnesota today charged that "propaganda" against the development of the water route which would link the middle western states with the eastern seaports emanates from the Atlantic seaboard Halifax or New York. Governor Christianson's views were given in an address to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence tidewater congress. He characterized the "propaganda" as "ungenerous," and as emanating from "the octupus of the Atlantic seaboard whose wealth and importance have been built up largely from contributions of people of mid-continent."

Pneumonia In Washington Ascribed To Coal Shortage

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5. — A sharp increase in the number of pneumonia cases in Washington is attributed by health officers to a shortage of coal.

Dr. William C. Fowler, District Health Officer, said the disease had been unusually prevalent since autumn, but that in the last ten days the number of victims had taken a big jump upward.

Suspension of work in the anthracite fields, he said, had caused many families to economize on coal for heating, while others had no coal at all.

There were six more deaths from pneumonia last week than in the corresponding week a year ago.

Dean Refuses To Marry Girls' 'Disfigured' By Paint

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—A crusade against the British approaching the altar with heavily powdered faces and painted lips has been started by Rev. Arthur Wells, Dean of a fashionable church. Although other and equally fashionable churches of the metropolis contain several rooms in which the bride may carry out cosmetic decorations, Dean Wells asserts that he will not marry any woman so "disfigured."

The Dean has not performed a marriage ceremony for several weeks.

THE WEATHER.

The weather conditions during the past few days partake of the nature of a "January thaw," but are hardly pronounced enough to be the genuine article. Yesterday's highest was 35 degrees; lowest 15 degrees. Last year at this date similar conditions prevailed, but were succeeded during the later half of the month by some very severe weather. A little colder to-night or to-morrow.—W. P.

All Members Reticent as to Exact Nature of Deliberations.

HAVE ONE OBJECT.

OTTAWA, Jan. 3 (Canadian Press).—Main line Progressives and members of the so-called "ginger group" Progressives met Robert Forke, the Progressive leader, this morning to discuss plans for the session. One of the main purposes of the meeting, it is understood, was an endeavor to reach a common basis for action as between all Progressives.

The Progressives attending to-day's conference were reticent as to the exact nature of the deliberations but the conference is understood to be largely a continuance of the conferences of last session.

"The Progressives have a common object," said one Progressive to-day, "and it is felt that more would be accomplished by working on a common basis than by working apart."

Mr. Forke was non-committal as to the stand of the Progressives in the coming session, except to say, "We do not intend to fall into the lap of either party."

BELGIUM'S LOSS IS FOUR MILLION

Twelve Known Dead Besides Heavy Property Loss From Flood.

MAY BE MORE.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Belgium to-day began the melancholy task of counting the losses from the worst flood the little country has experienced since 1740. While it will be days before the extent of the damage can be assessed with any degree of accuracy, the most conservative estimates place it well above 100,000,000 francs (about $4,500,000). Twelve persons are known to be dead, and it is feared this figure will be increased when reports arrive from those districts now isolated.

THE ORACLE

This day we fashion Destiny, our web of Fate we spin. —Whittier.

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute. —Milton.

Do you believe in the scientific determination of destiny?

The Examiner has secured the services of a local expert in the science of drawing from a few basic facts a great amount of information that will be helpful and interesting to you. This gentleman, who for obvious reasons desires to remain anonymous under the pen-name "The Oracle", has made a deep study of the science. It is a fascinating study, founded on facts that no one can dispute. It is one of the oldest of the sciences, revived through much reading and application to ancient tables and writings.

And the knowledge of the ages is offered to Examiner readers free of all cost.

All You Must Do

is fill in the attached form and mail it to "The Oracle", The Examiner Office, 419 George street, Peterborough. Initials only will be used in The Examiner. If you desire a personal reply, enclose a stamped envelope.

Please note that full information can be based only on the complete particulars. Here is what is offered:

When full particulars are given:

The significance behind your name; paths to follow to secure success; how you must act to gain happiness; whether the date named is an auspicious one on which to take an important step; your particular color; where to apply your efforts and where you will best succeed.

Please Remember

that the full name and full date of birth must be given, such as: "John Robert Doe, 12 March, 1899." In seeking advice on a particular day, state the date, month, and year.

And Take Warning

that "The Oracle" will not sugar-coat his pills. If you desire only pleasant things brought to your attention, do not send your inquiries to him. If there is a warning to be issued, "The Oracle" will give it; if there is a bad trait to be corrected, "The Oracle" will warn you of it.

No full names will be printed in The Examiner, only initials or pennames as given being used. And any information given to "The Oracle" will be kept confidentially. Replies will appear as soon as possible.

Full name .....

Birth date: (day) .....(month) .....(year) .....

Would the following date be an auspicious one for me to enter into an important transaction or engagement?

(day) .....(month) .....(year) .....

N. I.—You have deep personality and engaging ways, but have not synchronized your powers so as to gain success. Inventory your resources and learn to apply your powers where they will bring you suitable gains. You are trustworthy and dependable; not given to display of affection, but very sympathetic and practical in help. Marriage is not indicated in your reading, and you should move carefully in selecting a mate. Your color is brown. You were born on a Monday.

Smiles.—You are inclined to be reserved, opening your charm only to those with whom you are well acquainted. You have powers of business and art, but these are not yet set in definite lines. Your traits are yet in the formative stage. You omitted to give the date of the Friday in June of which you enquire. You were born on a Wednesday. Your color is opal.

Felix.—You will have to work hard for any success you seek but you have the stamina and the strength of character to carry you through. Your mentality is strong, active, and creative, but your vision needs widening, and you require to think outside yourself. You must live a clean life or your mental manifestations are likely to clog quickly. You do not worry over trifles, and do not like to take chances. Your color is flame. You were born on a Monday.

H. A.—You should not play a lone wolf in any enterprise, but should carefully seek counsel with your elders or seniors. You will not be successful in directing others. You have self-satisfaction and poise, and are conservative in thought. You may incline to mysticism or religion. You need to cultivate a broader sympathy and understanding of others; you are too inclined to limit your allowances for their failures to come up to the standard you set. Your writing is not very distinct, but if your birth dat is April 2 then you were born on a Friday. Your color is steel.

G. W. B.—Yours is not the position of leader, but you will make your way in the world. You have an active mentality, excellent reasoning powers, and like to see a job well done, though you may tire of detail and the trifles that are incident to the day's work. You have great tenacity, coupled with idealism and creative power; if allowed to drift you may become pugnacious and material. Set a high aim and endeavour to reach it. One is never too old to take another step upward—until one admits defeat. You were born on a Monday. Your color is silver.

R. O. R.—You are obstinate and difficult to reason with, endeavouring to force your own opinions on others who know better than you do in many cases. You are deficient in reverence and respect; are almost without belief in anything. Your observing powers are very low, you see but little. What you need is a good shaking-up, so that you will realize that at 27 you should be more than a cake-eater. Less girls and more work would be a good motto for you in 1926—and for a few years till you get caught up. In your present state you are a disgrace to your sex. You were born on a Friday. Your color is gray.

L. G.—You are amiable, thoughtful, and interesting. You have musical ability well above the average, and should not allow any circumstances to keep you from developing it under proper tutelage. You have a knack, but no love, for detail; can keep books accurately, but consider it labor; like the out-of-doors and would be good at sports. Take good care of your affections; do not waste them lightly on unworthy subjects. Make the man show his worth before giving your promise—however charming he may be a man in a routine position will never make you happy, or be happy with you, because of your superior talents. You were born on a Tuesday. Your color is blue.

EASTERN LANDS MOST FLOODED

Transylvania, Hungary and Rumania Sustained Heavy Losses.

EUROPE EMERGING.

PARIS, Jan. 5.— (Canadian Press.) — Transylvania, Eastern Hungary, and Roumania present the most critical situation in Europe, which is slowly emerging from one of the worst floods in its history.

The number of dead in these countries and the amount of damage inflicted probably will not be known for several days, perhaps weeks, on account of the demoralization of communications and the fact that vast areas of territory are likely to remain under water for some time. But is is certain that there will be a tremendous death toll and a huge financial loss.

IN POLICE COURT

The case against a local man who had been charged with stealing a congoleum rug, was withdrawn this morning following the representation of Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton that the informant was anxious to discontinue his action. Restitution had been made and the case was dismissed on payment of the court costs.

An aged man, formerly of the House of Providence, appeared before the Magistrate charged with vagrancy.

In a former appearance he had submitted a plea of not guilty, but after consideration he announced that he might plead guilty for a while. Later he decided to plead guilty without reservation. A sentence of imprisonment for a term of one month was imposed.

PRESTON MAYOR OF OSHAWA NOW

Defeated Ald. G. T. Norris By Good Majority Yesterday.

NEW COUNCILLORS.

OSHAWA, Ont., Jan. 5. — Canadian Press. — Alderman Robert D. "Bob" Preston, chairman of the Board of Works in the City Council of Oshawa, in 195, defeated Alderman George T. Norris, chairman of the Financial Committee in the race for the Mayors chair for 1926, by over 400 majority, in the election held yesterday. The successful candidate has had a remarkable career since coming to Oshawa five years ago, having served in the council as alderman for Ward No. [illegible], three of which he has been chairman of the Board of Works, and yesterday he was promoted to the highest gift in the hands of the electors. In the selection of aldermen for the five wards many new faces will be seen around the council board, in ward 4, while Clifford Harmen sits for the first time in ward 5.

For Board of Education there was a contest only in Ward Number 3, where Alexander W. Bell defeated Catain C. A. Mason.

Two out of the three bylaws were carried; Daylight saving by a big majority and the selection of a municipal board of education by the city as a whole instead of as at present by the ward system, also received a good majority. The bylaw to elect the city council from the city as a whole in place of the present system, three from each of the five wards, was defeated.

Mayor, Robert D. Preston.

Farmers Find Someone Has Cut Down Some Fine Trees

CULPRITS UNKNOWN

WARSAW, Jan. 5. — Owners of wood-lots are, in some cases, beginning to wonder what may happen their timber. A large elm tree on J. Condon's place was found felled, and the same thing happened a cedar tree on Martin McManus' place. On another wood-lot a man was evidently preparing to fell a tree when a young lad within saw him. There are known to have been two men going through woods, without any known reason.

There is quite a depth of snow for this season, and already the north and south roads are filling in. Where wire fences have been built the roads are all right.

A rink is being cleared off and boarded around, on the pond, above the United Church.

At the annual school meeting held in Warsaw School on Wednesday afternoon, there was quite a full attendance, among them five ladies—Mr. J. Rose, chairman, and Rev. H. B. Herrington, secretary.

Mr. David Rose, retiring trustee, was re-elected; the other two are Messrs. Clarence Watts and James Robinson.

A piano has been bought for the use of the school.

The trustees reported that the underpinning on the west side was giving way, the roof and floor in bad condition, and other repairs needed. They also reported the danger to children, as there is no playground except the road. After much discussion it was voted upon and carried that a vote of the ratepayers be taken on Wednesday, January 27, to decide whether or not a new school be built, and in so doing, if proper accommodation be made for a continuation class as well. At present this district is paying for the upkeep of outside high schools, and it is felt that there are many pupils who would attend a high school near at hand, who cannot go away from home to school. Parents generally dread allowing their children to leave home at the age to start high school. The board is a heavy expense, and clothing a child away from home is more expensive than at home.

The trustees will obtain information re expenses and all other questions, and call a public meeting some time before the date set for voting.

The school meeting at Douro No. 5 School represented the section fairly well. Matthew McMurray is the new trustee. The others are W. J. McManus and Fred Crowe.

Those who happened to be on the road or looking out on Tuesday evening saw the trees covered with frost and glittering in the moonlight. There was nothing on the trees at sundown, and it was gone by sunrise.

The Presbyterians have voted to carry on their Sunday school for another six months.

The United Church Missionary Society will meet in the parsonage on Thursday afternoon. Group 'C' has charge.

The smallpox patient in South Dummer is reported as doing nicely.

The United Church Sunday School superintendent gave the rewards for regular attendance on Sunday morning.

Those receiving seals for seven years' regular attendance were: Russel Greystock, Mrs. Everett Moore, Jean Bowen, Hiram Anderson. Seals for six years' attendance went to Elsie Moore, Allan Moore, Harold Payne. Fourth year seals went to Gerald Payne, Verna Miller, Cora Drain, Valetta Drain, Ivan Drain, Lyall Miller and Alex. Bowen earned third year seals. Second year seals went to Cress Payne, Mabel McCauley, Harry M. Cauley, Sydney McCauley, [illegible] Crowe, Mrs. Greystock, Ed[illegible] Cauley, Mrs. Taylor, Everett [illegible] Mrs. Sneider, Uriah [illegible] Payne, Mrs. Gordon [illegible] Greystock, Mrs. [illegible] Somers. BRINGING THEM TOGETHER.

The Rotary Club in following up the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. J. S. Martin, and arranging for a luncheon at which a number of leading farmers of the district will be the guests of the Rotarians, is undertaking a movement that cannot fail to have beneficial results.

The Kiwanis organization held a similar function last year, and there cannot be too many of these efforts to bring the farmer and city dweller into closer contact in order that each may learn something of the other's viewpoint and be better able to understand the other's problems.

Much work alone this line has already been accomplished by the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition, which combines both farmers and city residents in its directorate.

The result is that a mutual respect and liking has developed that has done much to create an entente between city and country.

There is no reason why there should be any great division between the urban and rural population.

All are Canadians, loyal, patriotic and interested in their country's growth and development.

Both classes are beginning to realize that the prosperity of one means the prosperity of the other, and functions such as that planned by the Rotary Club will quicken that realization and hasten the day of complete understanding between farmers and urban residents.

MORE INTEREST IN SCHOOLS.

The fact that many citizens who voted on Friday were paying their first visit to school since they left several decades ago suggests the necessity of a closer link-up between parent and school, such as is provided by the Home and School Associations.

Every father and every mother with children at school should see to it that he or she knows something not only about the school itself but about the teachers who are shaping the future of the children.

If citizens had not re-visited the school they attended as children thirty years or more until last Friday's voting took them there, it is evident that the School and Home Association membership is not as complete as it should be.

There should be a very close relationship between parents and teachers.

It is good for both, and it is better for the children.

The trouble is that too many parents have not paid the least attention to this phase of their children's education.

They know nothing about the teachers except what they learn from their little ones, and that is not always the most reliable information upon which to do any character study.

The change in the polling booths may cause in the minds of some citizens at least a revival of interest in the city's schools, and thus lead to a larger membership in the organization that is the connecting link between the home and the school.

FAITH IN CANADA.

In its striking advertisement published today the Bank of Toronto supplies a note of optimism, of firm faith in Canada and its future, that should be an inspiration to every Canadian who reads it.

"Today as never before," says the advertisement, "this bank subscribes unreservedly to the doctrine of sound optimism in the destiny of the country, affirming that today there are more impressive signs of the coming tide of prosperity than at any period since the war."

And then the Bank of Toronto gives concrete reasons why Canada has a bright future as a world trade influence, as an agricultural country, as a manufacturing nation and in the world of finance.

The figures given are such as to make Canadians more proud than ever that they are citizens of this great Dominion.

They furnish a sound foundation for building new hopes as to Canada's future and to encourage all citizens of this country to greet the new dawn that be- with the second quarter of the twentieth century courage that Canada will reach newer levels and a firm resolution that the prob- fore this nation will be attacked with the pioneers grappled with the country out of a forest. leadership to public national value.

THE TROUBLE IN FRANCE.

You may call the trouble in France lack of leadership, politics, budget deficit, the falling franc, or taxes—whatever you please; but they are all one, and the whole is summed up in one word, "taxes."

The English have bad politics and no great leadership; but the English people will insist upon paying taxes and meeting their national outgo.

There are many reasons for the French shirking a heavy taxation program. Both the English and the French were told that the Germans would pay the cost of the war, but the English knew better than to trust the Germans. France had her industrial area devastated, but England had her trade, shipbuilding, manufacturing and coal mining just as badly cut into. The French thought they might collect off Germany, even by force. The English, however, had a wider experience in international debt collections, and the French had to learn that military collections may be expensive and without immediate results.

As of old, when the French declaration was, "We will give our lives to the King, but not our money," so today the French people are giving their life-blood in the decline of the franc, instead of paying taxes.

It is literally true that with the decline in the franc France is bleeding to death, but is prosperous and happy.

The Frenchman shrugs his shoulders and says, "Something must happen to help us." "We have seen worse times before and came through." "It is not our habit to balance our budget." "We never have reduced our national indebtedness. Let posterity take care of it."

"I did not think the other nations would let the franc fall so far," said a little French countess to me. It seemed to me a foolish remark, but, upon due reflection, I thought there might be more in it than either of us knew, for the franc may become an international issue. It involves the peace and the security, not only of France but possibly of Europe, and it certainly has relation to the seven-billion-dollar indebtedness due the United States and Great Britain.

It is causing a flight of capital which no man can measure, and largely to the United States, whence there may be a reflex action should there be an international adjustment and confidence in the franc restored.

Business people must get a license from the Government to prove that it is necessary to send money out of the country to buy raw materials and carry on their business. But there are numerous ways of beating the Government. A friend of mine made a three-thousand-dollar purchase, and a bargain purchase it was. Then he offered a New York check at more than 20 per cent. discount from that price, and it was gladly accepted. If the franc should fall from four cents to two checks, the New York check would show a handsome profit.

The English bankers tell me they will be surprised if the franc goes below 200 to the pound, or about 2 1-2 cents; but who can tell?

When Sir Robert Horne started the Cannes conference after the war and shook hands with Walter Rathenau—he the first English statesman to extend a hand towards Germany—Rathenau then admitted to him that the depreciation of the mark had been entered upon deliberately to increase German exports and under-sell the world. They saw it meant the sacrifice of the middle classes and their savings, but they were willing to do it.

The night before he was assassinated, Rathenau admitted to Ambassador Houghton at Berlin that everything would be all right if they could hold the mark at 300 to the pound which they expected to do. But, having once entered the long tunnel, Germany, after exhausting her resources, including heavy Government and at times profitable speculation in the mark, found herself unable to arrest the decline, and the result was not only the wiping out of the paper mark but was a disaster many fold greater than the value of all the currency that ever was in any one time in Germany.

The destruction of the mark wiped out the liquid capital, the debit and credit of banking and book accounts, destroyed the savings of the middle class, the backbone of any country, and set back the business restoration of Germany by at least ten years.

When the French people find out what has been sapping their lifeblood they will not again destroy their art treasures or throw over the Vendome column. They will know that these have not misled them.

One of the leading economists of Europe said to me, "What else is there left for France? If the people won't pay taxes, they have to be taxed by inflation, whatever be the cost. You can't collect from the farmers."

As a matter of fact, the bulk of the taxes of France is paid by about ten thousand people, and it is declared that of four million families on the farms, only 250,000 are on the tax roll.

France is bleeding to death like the Germans and doesn't know it. When the German mark was going down, prosperity in Germany seemed greater than in France.

France is bursting with a wonderful crop and is well-nigh sufficient unto herself within her own borders. But for the flight of capital the whole world would be pouring money into her. Not only is there no unemployment, but, to gather her crops and do her work, France has to make use of 800,000 Italians and 300,000 Poles, or nearly twice the 612,000 men now in her armies, including the 235,000 soldiers in Morocco.

Everybody sees the wealth, the resources and the hopeful side of France. Like the weather, everybody talks about it, but nobody does anything about it. The fact that France is at least a year behind in the collection of her taxes is pointed to hopefully. Likewise the fact that she can balance her budget if she would but raise her railroad fares, make her match monopoly profitable and increase the revenue from her tobacco monopoly. She could, likewise, get American engineers to make an improved telephone system and get greater revenue from that service.

But when you ask why France does not do some of these things, the answer is, "Socialism and the Chamber of Deputies." When you ask how many Socialists there are in the French Parliament, you find that Socialists and Communists combined are less than one-quarter of the membership. Still the declaration is that this ... ority blocks everything. It is the element of Soci... t makes the politicians, the statesmen and ... ment timid and promotes the flight of ... arron's.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK.

TORONTO, Jan. 4.—Receipts for the first week of the New Year at the Union Stock Yards promise about an average. For this morning the arrivals show 232 cars, 4500 cattle, 259 calves, 1691 hogs and 665 sheep and lambs. There is a fair proportion of export stuff on sale and the firm of H. P. Kennedy & Co. will now enter the market as regular shippers and will send out 200 head this week. Rogers & Maybee have two boats to fill and will require around 900 head. Trading was not aggressive at the opening but the feeling was for about steady prices. Three export bulls were bought at $5.75 a cwt.

Asked prices were higher all round on cattle and the first string of mixed butchers was weighed at $7.15 a cwt. These were only good and buyers figured this was an advance of 10 to 15 cents a cwt. Exporters were very slow in operating and a load not quite choice went at $8.35 a cwt. All the export bulls sold from $5 to $5.75 a cwt. Cows were decidedly firm despite a good run. One choice cow sold at $6.25 a cwt. and good cows were $5 to $5.50. One load of light stockers brought $4.25 a cwt.

The market was keen on calves and prices were stronger by half a dollar a cwt. Fancy calves sold at 14 cents a pound and mediums were up to 11 cents a pound.

Lambs were firm and half a dollar a cwt. higher. All the good lambs, ewes and wethers were bid 14½ cents a pound and one bunch of extras sold at 15 cents.

The packers, according to last week's promise, lowered the bid on hogs to $12.50 a cwt. f.o.b., but none were sold at this figure up till noon. Saturday's cables from England were six to eight shillings a cwt. lower and the packers give this as a reason for lower prices here. Thick but smooth hogs will now be docked 50 cents a cwt.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press.— Active speculative buying and scarcity of offerings gave a decided lift to wheat prices today. Word that 1,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat had been taken for shipment to Europe was a stimulating factor, and so, too, was smallness of increase of the United States visible supply. Wheat closed strong, 3 1-2 cents to 4 cents net higher, new style, May 1.82 3-4 to 1.82 7-8, and July 1.56 1-2 to 1.56 5-8. Corn finished 1 3-4 to 2 cents up; oats at 1-4 to 1-2 cent gain, and provisions showing 12 to 30 cents advance.

New unofficial estimates which were received put the Argentine exportable surplus of wheat at around 100,000 bushels, an aggregate somewhat less than was figured last week. It was largely in consequence of this reduction, together with announcement that the United States visible supply had gained only 539,000 bushels in the last week that the wheat market here closed at the day's topmost level.

EGG PRICES

OTTAWA, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—Continued increasing receipts of fresh eggs continue to depress prices across Canada. Shipments of British Columbia eggs to Eastern markets are reported to be moving slowly.

Toronto—Country shippers paying extras 42 to 45, firsts 35, seconds 26 to 29, and making sales; extras 46 to 47, firsts 38, seconds 29 f.o.b.

Montreal—Vancouver is offering fresh extras 43. A car of British Columbia are here today on consignment. The egg market is dull and weak, and with stocks accumulating tone is weak. Poultry market is dull and declining.

Winnipeg — Egg market lower with fresh receipts increasing, dealers quoting country points, extras 45, firsts 37, seconds 25, jobbing prices unchanged. Poultry receipts light with no price change.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Jan. 4 (Canadian Press).—There was some demand from foreign buyers on the Montreal market today for Manitoba spring wheat and sales of several loads were made which tended to improve the inquiry in the local market, and sales of No. 1 Northern were made at 10 1-2 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg May option, and 1 cent per bushel under the same option, c.i.f. Bay Ports. The tone of the local market for under grades of Canadian Western oats was stronger, and prices were advanced 1 to 2 cents per bushel.

The feature of the dairy trade today was the announcement of the stock of creamery butter held in Montreal at the close of the year 1925, which was placed at 72,884 packages, showing a decrease of 50,927 packages, as compared with November 30, 1925, and a decrease of 82,487 packages with December 31, 1924, while the stock of dairy butter was 38 packages less than the previous month, and 1,420 packages smaller than a year ago.

The receipts of butter in Montreal for the week ending January 2, 1926, were 832 packages, as against 1,154 for the previous week, and 1,382 for the same week last year, while the total arrivals from May 1, 1925, to January 2, 1926, were 557,709, as compared with 607,365 for the same period of 1924-25. The receipts today were 399 packages, as compared with 537 for the same day last week, and 291 for the corresponding day a year ago.

Cheese Stocks Higher.

The stock of cheese in Montreal on December 31, 1925, was 193,279 boxes, which showed an increase of 14,104 boxes, as compared with November 30, and an increase of 72,733 boxes with December 31, 1925. According to cable advices received here the stock of Canadian cheese in the three principal English ports at the close of the year 1925, showed a decrease of 70,300 boxes, as compared with the November 30, and a decrease of 7,600 boxes with December 31, 1924.

The receipts of cheese in Montreal for the week ending January 2, 1926, were 798 boxes, as against 2,135 for the previous week, and 956 for the same week last year, while the total from May 1, 1925, to January 2, 1926, were 1,555,460 boxes as against 1,457,449 for the same period of 1924-25. The receipts today were 1,133 boxes, as compared with 125 for the same day last week, and 125 for the corresponding day a year ago.

There was no improvement in the demand for cheese from any source and the market in consequence was very quiet with early makes nominally quoted at 21 1-2c to 22c per lb., and current receipts at 18c to 18 1-2c per lb.

The stock of storage eggs in store in Montreal on December 31, 1925, showed a decrease of ... cases as compared with the previous month, and a decrease of ... cases with December 31, 1924, while the stock of fresh eggs was ... cases larger than November 30, 1925, and 527 cases smaller than December 31, 1924.

The receipts of eggs for the week ending January 2, 1926, were 3,858 cases, as against 1,... cases for the previous week, and 1,... cases for the same week last year, while the total arrivals from May 1, 1925, to January 2, 1926, were ... cases as compared with ... cases for the same period of 1924-25.

The receipts of eggs today were 2,033 cases, as against 1,423 for the same day last week, and 181 for the corresponding day a year ago. The tone of the market was about steady at the decline in prices noted with a moderate amount of business passing in fresh eggs. The condition of the market for storage eggs was unchanged, prices being steady under a fair demand.

A THOUGHT.

EVER LOOK AT IT THAT WAY?

You feel that you are living a life that suits you personally, and that it's nobody's business how you govern your personal affairs. All right, perhaps it isn't; but let's suppose you were going to die to-morrow. Ever look at it that way?

Meat—by Telephone!

"We would be lost without the telephone in the Packing Industry. It has enabled us to build up the Fresh Meat trade to big proportions."

Build up YOUR business by Telephone

The big Fresh Meat Industry of Canada is only 25 years old. Refrigerator cars and the telephone made its rapid expansion possible.

And since 1900, to meet the demands of industry, the number of Bell Telephones in Ontario and Quebec has multiplied 14 times.

To-day there are over 575,000. The methods of simpler days no longer suffice.—"Use the Bell to Sell."

"A STEER begins shrinking as soon as it is bought. It pays us to move quickly. The vast detail of buying cattle and hogs; of selling meat, hides, horns, tallow, casings, tankage, shortening, produce, butter, cheese and eggs could not be carried on to-day without the telephone"—says a leading Canadian packer.

As business is conducted to-day, the man who acts quickest generally gets the business—in any line.

Reach for the telephone and talk while you think! Try it. It gets results!

TRAINS PUSH THROUGH FLOODS IN FRANCE WITH WATER REACHING TO THE FLOORS OF THE COACHES

20,000 Workers Affected By Closing of Factories in Mezieres.

DANGER CONTINUES.

Four Bodies Recovered in Liege—Eight Searchers Believed Drowned.

PARIS, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press). —The Seine, Marne and Youne Rivers fell slightly yesterday, but the situation is not yet without danger, and never have the French so closely followed the weatherman's forecasts. The predictions are for continued rains, and the maximum flood level is expected in the Paris region about January 6 or 7.

The floods have reached their highest point in the region of Creil, Beauvais and Noyon, and trains from Paris are forced to slow down to 10 or 12 miles, with water reaching the floors of the coaches. Most of them are arriving many hours late at Paris.

The town of Compeigne, in the department of Oise, is still without drinking water, owing to the waterworks being flooded, and a limited supply is being handed out from barrels carried in boats or trucks according to the depth of the stream in the streets. The Marne still threatens the Paris-Strasbourg main line, and many streets in Soissons are under water through the rise of the Aisne.

Stores Flooded.

Reports which are beginning to arrive from Caen say that the river Orne rose so rapidly that shopkeepers had no time to close their stores before the rushing water covered the floors. The damage here is estimated at twenty million francs. In the Meuse Valley Mezieres is half submerged, and factories have been closed, affecting 20,000 workers. Conditions in Paris are normal except for stoppage of river navigation.

In Belgium the destruction has been heavy. At Liege four bodies were recovered from the ruins yesterday, when work of rescue was possible in the lower quarters of the town. But one boat with a crew of eight men searching for bodies was carried away by the rushing torrent and capsized, and it is believed all were drowned.

Heavy Loss of Life.

The entire country between Liege and the Dutch frontier is still under water, which is receding. The loss of life will be heavy, while the losses to property will amount to many millions.

STEADY PROGRESS.

Pelig Howland, president of the Imperial Bank, who sees in Canadian agricultural prosperity assurance of steady progress in Canada during 1926.

ALFALFA GAINING.

Big Increase in Canadian Acreage.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 5 (Canadian Press) — The alfalfa acreage in Canada shows an increase of 417,000 acres during the past five years. Last year, the acreage was 655,000 acres, as contrasted with 238,000 acres in 1920. The increase, it was stated at the Federal Department of Agriculture yesterday, is due largely to the development of our own seed supply from winter hardy varieties.

Alfalfa which is one of the best fodder crops for live stock, has a perennial habit of growth and the power to increase the fertility of the soil through making use of the nitrogen of the air and the fertilizing elements of the subsoil. It is also used in seeding mixtures for hay and pasture, particularly when red clover seed is a short crop, which occurred last year.

WASHINGTON, January 5. — Canadian Press. — President Coolidge submitted to congress on Monday a supplemental budget estimate calling for $149,250,000 to enable the internal revenue bureau to make refunds for the next 14 months on taxes erroneously collected. He also forwarded requests for two deficiency appropriation totalling $622,000 to be used for refunds by the customs service.

ITALIANS MOURN WITH KING HIS MOTHER'S DEATH

House of Savoy Represents Sovereignty of the Whole Nation.

WAS BELOVED.

Death Came Suddenly After Recovery From Recent Pneumonia.

BORDIGHERA, Italy, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press). — As a family might mourn one of its best beloved members, Italy mourns the loss of Dowager Queen Margherita of Savoy, mother of King Victor Emmanuel, who died peacefully at 11 o'clock Monday morning surrounded by her immediate family in her modest villa on the sunny shores of the Rivera.

Although the death of the Queen Mother was not unexpected, it brought forth a spontaneous wave of characteristically intense emotion from the entire land, sweeping away the differences between men, parties and classes and uniting Italians everywhere in sorrow for the passing of the gentle old woman, known as "the Italian Queen," because she also of Italy's feminine sovereigns was born on Cisalpine soil.

Death was due to a cerebral thrombus, or blood clot, symptoms of which became manifest Sunday morning after the Queen Mother apparently had quite recovered from a recent attack of pleural pneumonia. Her previous illness had given rise to serious anxiety, but her constitution so completely weathered the storm that daily bulletins were discontinued; then Sunday afternoon the alarming word that grave symptoms had developed shocked the nation. The King and Queen and other members of the Savoy family hastened here, but found on their arrival that no hope of her recovery was entertained.

Early Sunday morning the Queen entered into a comatose state, in which she remained supported by oxygen treatment until the end, except for a few lucid moments.

A Nation's Grief.

The news of the Dowager Queen's death, carried throughout the nation by telephone, telepgraph and special black-bordered editions of the newspapers, brought grief to the millions of people, as well as to the modest room in the Vatican where the Pontiff was quietly studying. Immediately on being informed by Cardinal Gasparri of the death of the Queen, whom he knew personally, Pope Pius expressed deep sadness and retired to pray in his private chapel. It is asserted, but cannot be confirmed, that the Pope conferred a pontifical benediction when it became apparent that the royal sufferer could not survive, this fact being significant in view of the friction between King Humbert, the Queen's husband, and the Holy See.

Premier Mussolini, who was informed by private telegram from King Victor Emmanuel, was deeply moved. He issued a proclamation to the nation and the armed forces, recalling that Margherita had always been the symbol of regality and gentility. He then left for Bordighera.

Signor Cremonesi, Rome's new Governor, issued a similar proclamation of condolence on the part of the Roman people. Personal messages have been received in Bordighera from the members of the cabinet and other notables.

Activities Suspended.

Throughout the nation normal activities have been stilled, buildings are draped with black, and flags half-masted. The theatres, schools, public buildings and most of the stores have been closed and all ceremonies and public activities have been suspended.

No arrangements have yet been made for the funeral, but it is believed it will be elaborately carried out at Rome.

Most significant of the high regard enjoyed by the Dowager Queen is the immediate appeal by the press for burial beside her husband in the Pantheon, the repository of the nation's most illustrious dead.

Adherents of the new movement are commercial telegraphers formerly members of the Commercial Telegraphers Union of America, an international organization.

JUDGE DEFERS VOTE DECISION

Settlement of North Huron Election Case May Be Precedent.

FOR PEACE RIVER.

EDMONTON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Giving it as his present opinion that a Manitoba decision quoted by R. D. Tighe would act as a bar against the success of the application to direct His Honor Judge Mahaffey to disregard the votes cast at Paddle River poll in the recent Peace River Federal election, Mr. Justice Ives yesterday agreed to withhold definite decision until Jan. 18, pending settlement of the North Huron case, where two candidates will be gazetted for one seat.

The proceedings were the continuation of the argument that a judge of the Supreme Court direct Judge Mahaffey to disregard the Paddle River vote. Such a direction would result in the election of James A. Collins, Conservative, in place of D. M. Kennedy, Progressive, who was declared elected by the returning officer, W. H. Sheppard of Grande Prairie, and the result sustained on a recount made by Judge Mahaffey.

R. D. Tigue, barrister, acting for Mr. Kennedy, argued that a decision in the Manitoba courts held that once the returning officer had sent in his final return to the chief electoral officer, and there was at that time no appeal pending, it was too late to make any appeal.

In the present case, the official return reached Ottawa, on December 23, while the appeal application was filed three days later. Mr. Kennedy was gazetted as member for Peace River on Jan. 2.

With New Heart and New Hope Canada Sets her Course Toward the Goal of True Greatness

THE Dominion of Canada passes the first quarter of the Twentieth Century with Faith and Resolution perched high upon her banners.

Faith in the prophecy of a great Canadian that the Twentieth Century should be Canada's.

Resolution to carry on the mighty tasks of nation-building that were only begun by that rugged generation which has passed along.

—as a World Trade Influence

(Note.—The figures used in the statements following are quoted for by the Dominion Department of Trade and Commerce.)

Canada occupies second place among the world's exporters on a per capita basis, and holds fourth place among the world's greatest traders in foreign markets.

Canada, during a period of twenty-one years, has increased exports from 200 millions to more than one billion dollars; her total world trade has advanced from 400 millions to one billion 900 millions.

—as an Agricultural Nation

Canada has one million workers engaged in agriculture, working only one-fifth of her arable land; these workers produced revenue from the soil amounting to one billion 420 million dollars annually. The total agricultural investment is approximately seven billions.

Dairy products yield over 250 million dollars annually; live stock revenue averages over 140 million dollars; field crops yield more than 900 million dollars annually. Canada in 25 years has increased the acreage under cultivation from slightly less than 20 million acres to nearly 60 million.

—as a Manufacturing Nation

Canada employs approximately 700,000 people in industrial and manufacturing pursuits, with a return of 4 billion dollars annually. Canada's total investment in manufacturing amounts to approximately 3 billion 500 million dollar. Canada's manufactured and semi-manufactured products represent more than 55 per cent of her export trade.

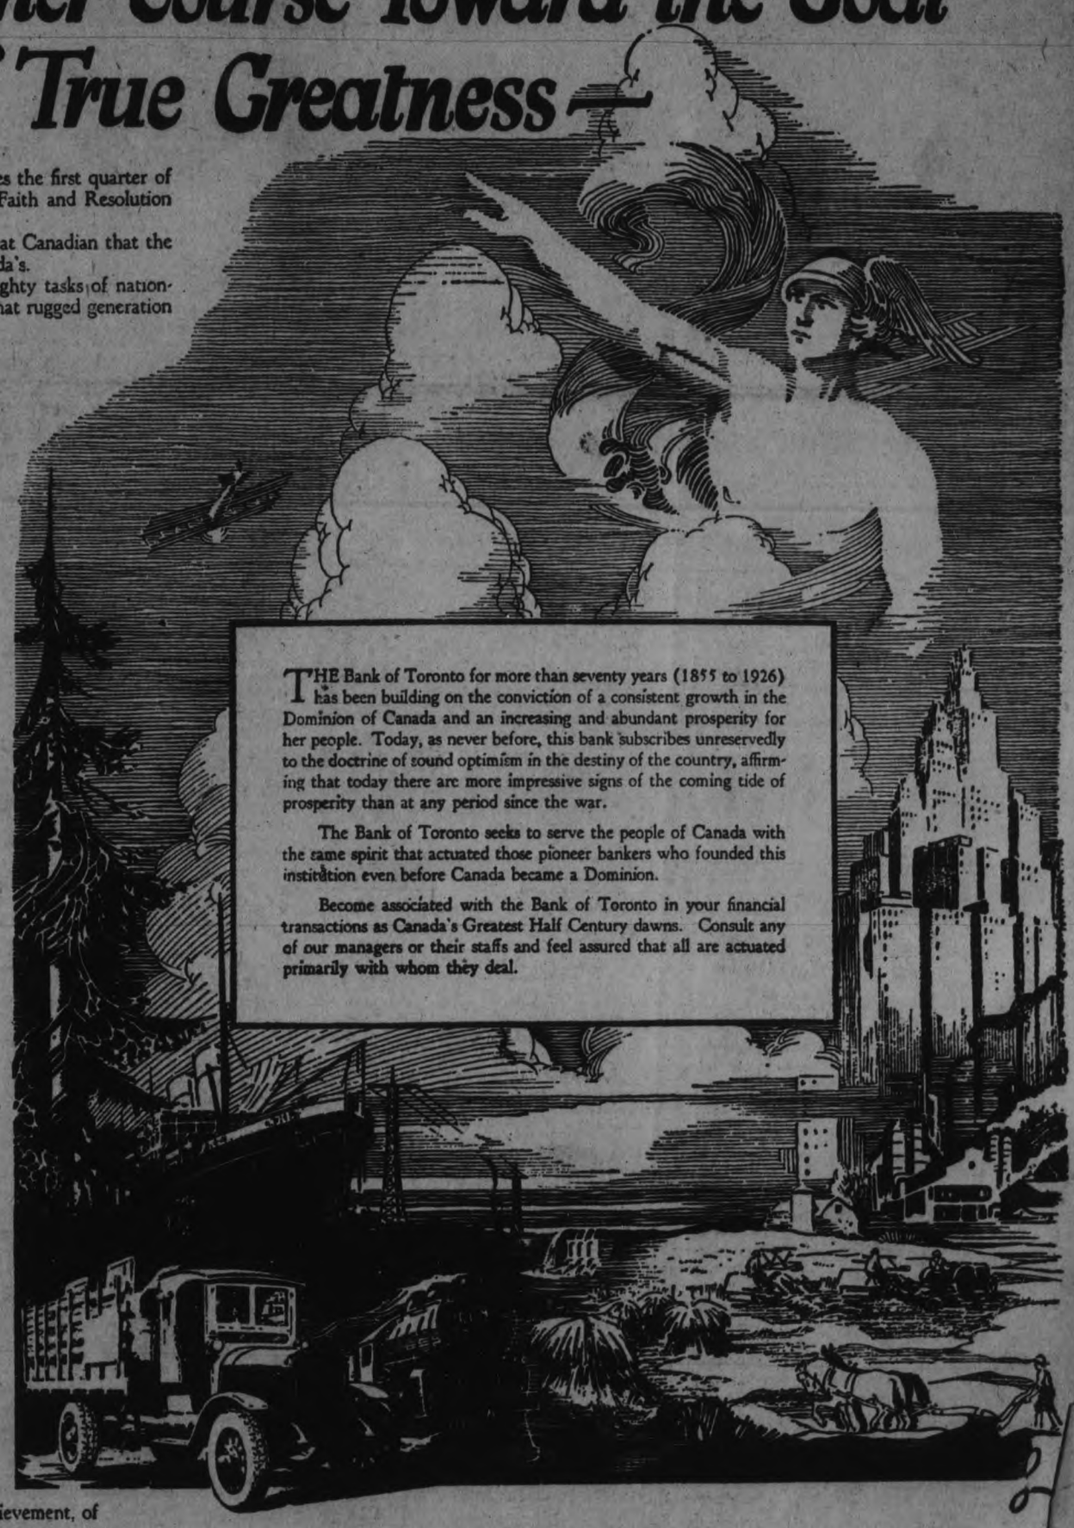
Canada in a twenty-year period has increased the production of manufactured goods from 480 million to more than 4 billion dollars.

—in the World of Finance

Canada increased her National Debt seven-fold and enlisted one-thirteenth of her 1914 population in the fight to maintain world civilization, yet today her per capita debt is less than that of any of her allies, except the United States, which was in the world war but one year and a half. Canada's own citizens hold eighty per cent of the bonds representing Canada's indebtedness.

Canada's population of nine millions has more than two billion dollars on deposit. Her people have invested in the last ten years more than 3 billion dollars in bonds.

Canada has attracted, in the last quarter century, more than 4 billion 200 million dollars of British and United States capital.



THE Bank of Toronto for more than seventy years (1855 to 1926) has been building on the conviction of a consistent growth in the Dominion of Canada and an increasing and abundant prosperity for her people. Today, as never before, this bank subscribes unreservedly to the doctrine of sound optimism in the destiny of the country, affirming that today there are more impressive signs of the coming tide of prosperity than at any period since the war.

The Bank of Toronto seeks to serve the people of Canada with the same spirit that actuated those pioneer bankers who founded this institution even before Canada became a Dominion.

Become associated with the Bank of Toronto in your financial transactions as Canada's Greatest Half Century dawns. Consult any of our managers or their staffs and feel assured that all are actuated primarily with whom they deal.

What a panorama of past achievement, of present opportunity and future greatness must pass before the eyes of all those Canadians possessed of the spirit that cries "Ever Onward!"

The New Dawn has come for Canada in the first quarter of this most eventful of all centuries. Every true Canadian should greet it as the Omen of a Greater Canada and a Greater Canadianism.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

DAVID MEETS A LITTLE ROBBER.

When David saw the little creature run across the path into the woods, he started after it.

"Now what in the world do you suppose that is?" he laughed.

"Were you speaking to me?" asked a tiny voice, and David turned around to see a wee little elfin running at his side.

"Oh, Squeedee! Where did you come from?" David exclaimed. "Did you see that funny looking thing running through the grass? I wish I knew what it was."

"What did it look like?" asked the elfin.

"Something like a rat," replied David," only it was larger than Chatty Chipmunk, with a very short legs and a great long tail."

"What color was he?" asked Squeedee.

"Yellowish-brown, I think," replied David. Just then they stopped short, for the little fellow in question was sitting on a stump right in front of them.

"Hello there, Squeedee," he squeaked, in a funny little voice. "Had a nice run?"

"Well, if it isn't my old friend, Mr. Cotton Rat," laughed Squeedee. "This is my little friend, David. Still as big a thief as ever?"

"Well, I still have the reputation of being a Little Robber, but I have been trying to be good," chuckled Mr. Cotton Rat. "I'm glad to meet you, David. Living in the South, or just visiting?"

"Just visiting, but I wish I could stay here always," replied David.

"Do You Eat Cotton?"

"For I never go out of the house but that I run across something new and interesting. I've met so many interesting meadow folk that we don't have up North. I've never heard of a Cotton Rat before."

"Because you don't raise cotton up North, I guess," laughed Squeedee.

"Do you eat cotton?" asked David. Squeedee and Cotton Rat both laughed.

"Goodness! no," replied Mr. Cotton Rat. "I eat all kinds of grain and meat, when I can get it."

"And he steals birds' eggs and even the baby birds," interrupted Squeedee. "I'm really glad you've promised to stop that part of it."

"Yes, I haven't robbed a bird's nest since I promised you I wouldn't, Squeedee. But I haven't improved my terrible temper. I've tried to straighten that out. But I get mad, and then it's fight with me. You see I almost have to fight. I have so many enemies, owls, foxes and hawks. If I lived all alone it wouldn't be so bad, but I have a wife and five babies in a burrow over in the ditch along the fields. Which reminds me, she's waiting for me. Good-by," and like a shot out of a gun, Mr. Cotton Rat was out of sight.

David laughed and catching hold of Squeedee's hand, away he ran in search of new adventure.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6.

An active day is forecast from the prevailing stellar influences. But while things may move ahead at a lively pace there may be small worries and trifling setbacks. However, the mind should be set to overcome these annoyances, finding perspicacity as well as profundity under the Saturn and Jupiter aspects to Mercury. Directed toward the affairs of women in business, society and art, progress should be made.

Those whose birthday it is may enjoy a fairly active year, with success wrung from perplexing and thwarted situations, although these may be rather petty and overcome by good judgment and clever management. A child born on this day should be clever, original, and have a keen judgment as well as profound insight into ordinary matters. It should make its best success in dealing in the affairs of women, although poetry and literature may bring good recognition.

FAMOUS FORTUNES

By Barbara Bayne

JAMES B. DUKE— the "Tobacco King."

As a mere lad the late James B. Duke had determined ideas about the tobacco industry—and he became the most powerful tobacco figure in history.

Washington Duke, of Durham, North Carolina, was the founder of the great tobacco firm. He started growing tobacco on a small farm near Durham, his plant comprising a 30 x 60 foot barn and the log house where James was born about 1858.

When James was eighteen years old he was offered the opportunity to go to college but declaring that he "preferred a chance to make money" his father gave him an interest in the business and told him to go as far as he liked. And soon the country was hearing a good deal about "Duke of Durham."

The firm had built a factory in Durham and opened another in New York when the Alexandrian head of the Duke company went after business in volume. Established in New York, Duke had a tremendous dream that he mulled over for two years before it materialized in 1890, when his firm with four of the largest tobacco concerns in the country formed a merger known as the American Tobacco Co. The business that was started in a little log house was put into the merger at a valuation of $7,500,000!

England had invaded Duke's foreign territory, so in 1901 he established headquarters in London. Followed the famous "tobacco war." But despite the thunders of the English press against the intruder from Yankeeland, he won the fight.

As a Youth He Grew Tobacco.

In 1911 the American Tobacco Co., was doing a business of $325,000,000 a year and the Anti-Sherman Trust Law laid its heavy hand upon the great structure that "Buck" Duke had built up. In the splitting-up process, British buyers got every share of stock they could lay hands on.

Duke spent millions in organizing and developing the Southern Power Co., which supplies electric power for nearly 100 towns, 200 cotton mills and other industrial plants.

"Was Soon Able To Sleep Well"

The usual experience of nerve-racked people who use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

When the nerves are starved and depleted you become restless, irritable and suffer from loss of sleep. The regular use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food soon lifts you out of this condition by supplying to the system the elements of Nature from which nerve force is created.

Mrs. H. N. Tardell, Harrowsmith, Ont. writes:—"My nerves were in a very bad state, and I did not know what it was to have a good night's rest. I could not eat, and never felt well. After taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for a few days I was able to sleep well at night. My appetite also returned, and I felt stronger and better, and after taking three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was quite well."

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

When Prof. Lorenz was in this country on his "Mission of Mercy" to American crippled children I came in contact with one of his able assistants, Dr. Franklin V. Van Wart. At that time I learned that Dr. Van Wart never speaks unless he has something worth while to say.

This confidence in the man made me pause the other day when I saw a newspaper statement attributed to him. He was commenting on a new ailment said to be increasingly common in London. He said:

"Ankle agony, as this disease has been aptly names by the English physicians, is a new danger which the present-day girl must face in her chase after style. This ailment is really arthritis, a swelling of the joint caused by exposure. It is also true that if this condition is allowed to continue uncared for it may result in permanent deformation of the affected joint.

"This malady brings on a general physical weakening and leaves its victims more susceptible to the hundred other ailments that come along with the winter season. Angle agony is all that the name implies. It is very painful and very unsightly. The slim ankle is now in vogue, but tell the girls that those who would show snappy limbs next summer will be the ones who don their woolen stockings now."

I have never failed to defend the silk stockings and the sheer dress of modern women, but there is a limit beyond which I cannot go. It is a pity that women are so reluctant about proper foot wear in cold and wet weather. Cold feet and wet feet are productive of many ills. Dr. Van Wart goes about it wisely and well. If the women can be convinced there is danger of deforming their ankles, I have no doubt there will be a reform in dress.

It isn't necessary to wear golf stockings to keep warm. There are woolen under-stockings which can be worn beneath the silk or other attractive stocking. This gives the warmth without detracting from the neat appearance.

Arthritis is no pleasant ailment, I assure you. It is an inflammation of the joint and every such inflammation is liable to result in deformity or worse.

I trust that these warnings may improve the practices of our charming sisters and daughters.

ANNUAL CONCERT AT SUNDAY SCHOOL

Large Audience at Millbrook United Church on New Year's Night.

MILLBROOK, Jan. 5.—The annual New Year's entertainment, in connection with the United Church Sunday School, was held on Friday evening, Jan. 1, with a fairly large audience in attendance.

The programme provided was well presented and evidently appreciated, the motion songs by the tiny tots being always a popular feature, while the scarf drill by the C.G.I.T. group received well merited applause. The girls wore white Greek dresses with silver tinsel at neck and sleeves, and used also for girdle and head-band.

The march from the basement began promptly at 8 p.m., the little folk taking their places at once upon the platform. Mrs. H. W. Johnston played for the motion songs, Miss May Duncan for the drill and Miss Ella Elson for the remaining part of the programme.

The pageant, "The Way of Life," requiring over sixty characters, which was written specially for the diamond jubilee of the Ontario Religious Education Council and given twice before large audiences at the convention in Hamilton last October, was the main feature of the evening. It is founded upon the song "The Wayside Cross," and as this was sung in the wings by a quartette—Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Johnston, Mr. McDowell and V. C. Lambert—there passed slowly across the platform those of all ages who would know the way of life-Christ's way.

Gordon and Esther Might, the little son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Might, came in front of the curtain before each scene and held a banner naming the act to follow, while "A Voice" (Mrs. H. Lang) spoke from the gallery giving Scripture emphasis to the lesson each scene would depict.

A ringing trumpet call in the distance marked the entrance and march up the aisle of the "Herald" (Miss Jean Burnham), dressed in soft robes of white, silver trimmed, and wearing a glittering crown, and her appearance before the curtain with the challenging question, "Which way shall they take, the children, the youth of our land?" was the signal for the pageant to open. The "Herald" was accompanied by two trumpeters, Jack Byam and Ernest Burnham, who wore striking costumes of red and white, with short blue shoulder capes, red lined, and medieval hats of white, with red binding.

Between the scenes either the "Herald" or the "Voice," or both, were heard, a trumpet call usually preceding the former's appearance.

The first banner read "The Procession," and the second, "Living in the Way," when a cosy home scene was presented, the evening closing with family worship, the characters being :Parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Rowland; children, Jack Stinson, Ethel and Orval Rowland.

Scene three, "Those Who Point the Way," was most impressive, with four characters representing each department of the modern Sunday School, forty in all, massed upon the platform, the Greek gowns of the ladies showing the distinctive colors for each group. After the chosen representative had spoken, a banner was unfurled naming the several groups—Cradle Roll, Marjorie Skitch, blue; Beginners, Florence Fallis, pink; Primary, Miss P. Burnham, green; Junior, Mrs. O. Williamson, yellow; Intermediate, Mr. C. C. Garside; Senior, Mr. F. N. Alcorn; Young People's, Miss S. Hetherington, blue; Adult, Mrs. (Dr.) Rea, mauve; Home, Rev. Jos. Wilks; District Visitor, Miss N. Hetherington, white; Directors of Religious Education, Mr. W. Fred Fallis. "Breathe on Me, Breath of God" was sung at the close, the leaders kneeling.

Scene four, "Instruction in the Way," had an exercise, "The Flag That Flies Highest of All," Mrs. O. Williamson and Mrs. Allan Mitchell being the instructors for a class of juniors. Donald Lang brought in the British flag, the entire audience rising and singing the National Anthem; Marshal Fallis carried the French flag, La Marseillaise being played; Johnston Rowland answered the summons for the Stars and Stripes to the music of the Star Spangled Banner, and, as a climax, Arthur Howard bore aloft the Christian flag, while "Onward Christian Soldiers" was sung. All the other flags were laid in homage before this one which "flies highest of all."

This scene was followed by an exercise depicting the activities, pledge and ideals of the Canadian-Girls-in-Training programme, the entire group being used. Four girls carried the letters, "C.G.I.T.," each having a spoken part—Elsie Spence, Hazel McMahon, Wilma Fallis, Pearl Davis. "Girls of Canada" was sung as a concluding chorus.

"Activities in the Way" followed, showing practical Christian service: A sick girl (Marguerite Hawken) visited by a friend (Sadie Rowland), who brought to her couch a bunch of roses, while the little nurse (Marian Earle) attended to her comfort; two little helpers (Martha Earle and Anna Rowland) washed dishes carefully; a missionary teacher (Mrs. I. M. Nattrass) instructed her class of Chinese girls (Bryar Edmunds, Toy Nattrass, Mary Burnham and Marie McBain); and an invalid old man (James Mason) was given an outing in his wheeled chair by Arnold Fallis. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, My brethren, ye did it unto Me," was the comment made by "The Voice."

The concluding scene, "Praise to Him Who is the Way," had all the characters massed upon the platform, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" being sung, with the epilogue spoken by "The Herald," followed by the doxology, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. F. H. Howard.

The numbers preceding the pageant were: Motion song, "The Little Truant," by the primary children; recitation, "The New Year's Gifts," by Toy Nattrass; chorus, "The Mamma Dolls," by 12 little girls; scarf drill, by the C.G.I.T. group; motion song, "Farmer John," by the primaries.

Mr. W. Fred Fallis, superintendent of the Sunday School, was chairman. The total receipts were nearly $80.00, with the children of the school admitted free.

For Deep Chest Colds

All colds should be treated with vapors, for vapors alone can carry the medication DIRECTLY to the air passages and lungs.

Vicks is a "vapor" treatment in salve form. For deep chest colds you first apply hot wet towels over throat and chest to open the pores, then massage briskly with Vicks for 5 minutes, spread on thickly and cover with a flannel cloth.

Vicks not only penetrates like a poultice or plaster, but the ingredients, vaporized by the body heat, are inhaled all night long.

This double action usually checks the most stubborn cold overnight.

VICKS VAPORUB

OVER 21 MILLION JARS USED YEARLY

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

FROM MRS. MORRIS.

To the Editor of Examiner.

Sir,—May I say a few words of explanation to many of my supporters in the late election? I, with a number of prominent men in the city, had persuaded Mr. E. Roland Wilson to be nominated for the Board of Education, his intention being to qualify only if a vacancy existed. By eight o'clock on Thursday evening, 24th Dec., it was known that four old members of the Board and Mr. J. A. McNab were in by acclamation, all others having definitely withdrawn.

Realizing that Mr. Wilson, with his technical knowledge and practical experience would be of the greatest value to the Board when the Vocational School is being built and equipped, I, with the full concurrence of Dr. Craig, whose election and mine were the only ones in doubt, urged Mr. Wilson to qualify at once. He was most reluctant to do so, but finally consented and qualified shortly before nine o'clock. The result is completely satisfactory to me. Mr. Wilson, for several years, has followed this Vocational School proposition with the greatest interest, and has helped me with advice and assistance. He will carry greater weight with some sections of the public than I could ever hope to, and when he gives facts and figures they will not be questioned, as they were when I gave them.

The cause of the vocational extension which I have championed for five years has not been hurt by my defeat and has gained through the election of Mr. Wilson.

Sincerely,
KATE MORRIS.

CZARIST OFFICERS.

MOSCOW, Jan. 5 (United Press).—Political police of the Ukraine today arrested a group of alleged "white" conspirators, supposed to have been seeking to prepare the ground in the Crimea for a landing of "white" forces from Rumania.

Police Chief Balitzky asserted that the alleged plotters, mostly former officers of the Czarist army, said to be in the pay of General Wrangel and Grand Duke Nicholas, attempted to wreck trains on which Soviet officials travelled, and to kill foreign delegations visiting Russia.

Refreshments were served and every person had a good time.

The amusement committee, consisting of Jack McWilliams (chairman). Alf McKee, James Turner, Warren Turner and Orville Roseborough, was in charge of the preparations.

The club now has a membership of 23, the membership having advanced rapidly in the last three months.

GIRLS DANCED.

Sophia Yeotes and Moira Coutts Charmed Audience.

(Contributed).

The charming dancing of two little girls, pupils of Miss Marion May Perry, at the Peterborough Tennis Club dance on New Year's Eve, is deserving of mention.

As the Old Year went out at midnight to the impressive strains of the Last Post, Moira Coutts, in the guise of a white winged fairy, ushered in the New Year by striking twelve chimes on a silver-toned bell.

Following the midnight frolic, she and Sophia Yeotes danced the graceful measures of the "Rose Dance" in appropriate costumes. The appreciation of the large gathering of merry-makers was responded to with the "Pierrot and Pierrette" number, and this in turn was followed by an impish rendering of the Charleston, which evoked considerable amusement and applause.

At the request of a number of guests who were at supper during this performance, the two children danced again to the evident appreciation of the large circle of spectators.

Mr. Ken. Blood at the piano played a tuneful accompaniment to the efforts of the little dancers.

TIMES COMMENTS ON RUBBER CRUSADE

Regrets Hoover Was Drawn Into Making Inaccurate Statements.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press—The Times, which previously had not commented editorially on the rubber controversy, says today:

"We regret that Secretary Hoover allowed himself to be drawn into a series of statements which can only be ascribed as inaccurate, unwise, and calculated to cause ill-feeling among Americans imperfectly familiar with the facts. His allegations of profiteering—for that is what they amount to—are quite unjustified.

"It is not a case for recrimination but for common sense. At best, Mr. Hoover's laments cannot increase the world production of rubber; at worst, they may serve to check the world-wide movement for the amicable adjustment of economic difficulties between nations by mutual concession and agreement."

ROBERT SCOTT IS COMING EAST

Identified as Joseph Redding, Robbery Convict in California.

MERCED, Calif., Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press.)—Wanted in Chicago in connection with the murder of Jacob Maurer, Robert Scott, alias Joseph Redding, was brought down from a convict camp in the high Sierras last night by two guards and to-day boarded a train en route for San Francisco on the first lap of a journey back to Illinois. Serving time for robbery in San Francisco, Scott was identified from photographs and finger prints. His brother, Russell, snatched from the gallows by a last minute insanity plea, had early in his trial maintained that it was his brother Robert who killed Maurer.

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press.)—Mark Gee, a Chinese, aged 38, was found dead yesterday afternoon hanging from a rope attached to a door jamb in his room.

In Peterborough Churches

ST. PAUL'S
(Contributed.)

The reverent manner in which the large congregation filed out of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Sunday evening indicated how deeply those in attendance had been impressed by the service. While unusual topics are sometimes announced as the sermon subjects, they are always found to be true to the Scriptures, and appreciative comments are frequently heard of the fact that Rev. Wm. Allan honors God's Word in all his messages.

The announced subject for Sunday night possibly led Bible students to do some hard thinking. It was, "What God Commanded but Never Intended; Was Commenced, but Never Ended." The sermon was based on God's command to Abraham to offer his beloved son, Isaac, as a sacrifice. The Scripture reading showed how this command had later been countermanded and how God had provided a special sacrifice after testing and demonstrating Abraham's faith.

The subject thought of the sermon was tests. People sometimes ask why God permitted Adam and Eve to be tested, when he knew there was a possibility that they might fail; in fact, that they would fail. The test was permitted in order that man might become a moral being. Unless we have the privilege to choose the wrong, we cannot be commended when we choose the right. God would not be glorified by praise from people who had no power to do otherwise than praise Him. It is when we resist the temptations of the world and surrender our lives to God that we honor and glorify God.

Abraham was one of the greatest characters in all history. This was because of his faith. His failures were due to his unbelief.

Just as God allowed Adam and Eve to be tempted, and they failed, and just as Abraham was tempted but triumphed through his willingness to surrender his only Son to God, believing that God could raise his up again, so God allowed His only begotten Son to be tested and tempted by sin. Christ was victorious over all temptations, but with God's approval surrendered Himself to death in order to show God's love and provide a way of salvation for those who were lost through Adam's sin.

The implications of the subject were brought home with force to the congregation. When God permits trouble to enter the lives of His people, He is honoring them as He honored Abraham, by testing their faith. He is just as able to give His people strength today to meet their temptations and to bless them, as He blessed Abraham if His people will but trust Him as Abraham trusted. God's will for His people will be accomplished in their lives only as they are willing to surrender everything to Him, holding nothing back.

It was announced that next Sunday evening, there will be the third of the services devoted specially to young men and young women. The choir loft will be filled by a special choir of men. There will be other special musical features in connection with the service. The annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid and election of officers will be held Wednesday afternoon.

TRINITY CHURCH.
(Contributed.)

The first service of the series of religious services that are being conducted under the auspices of the United Churches in Peterborough was held on Sunday evening in Trinity United Church. There was a fairly good attendance and the meeting was characterized by deep interest and devotion. The speaker was Rev. J. D. Richardson, of St. James' church. He took as his theme, the "Mind Which Was In Christ." The thesis of the message was that Jesus' attitude of mind toward God was the means of interpretation of God, so that men might have the same attitude and thus realize the presence of God.

To Jesus, God was very real. Jesus ever stood in a conscious, personal relationship to God, which was expressed in terms of loving obedience to the Father. Jesus also was ever possessed with an abiding sense of the Fatherly love; thus he lived with an assurance of peace which is always the characteristic of deep and true religion. Again the mind of Jesus was expressed in terms of His answering will to the will of God, and the only true spiritual satisfaction can come when the soul's answer to God's will is clear and constant. The speaker made an appeal that his hearers would so practice the same attitude of mind and heart that they might have in turn the consciousness of the reality of God, the Fatherly love and that these might be expressed in terms of loving obedient service, with a clear sense of assurance of peace that the individual might ever say, "Abba Father."

The services will be continued each evening this week in Trinity church, commencing at 7.45 o'clock.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

Tomorrow, being Epiphany, there will be two services in All Saints' Church, Holy Communion at 10.00 a.m, and evening service at 8.00 p.m. Venerable Archdeacon Davidson and Rev. T. J. O'Connor-Fenton, Rural Dean, will give short addresses at the evening service.

Mr. Claud Melanson, Castleford, Ont., writes:—"In regard to your remedies I have to say that B.B.B. was the only medicine I could get to relieve me of my boils and carbuncles.

Mine Market Trade Was Light But Firm To-day

TORONTO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Trading was considerably decreased in volume on the Standard Mining Exchange today. The general tone continued firm, however, though Silvers again showed some weak spots. Argonaut, Consolidated West Dome and Goldale were heavily dealt in. Argonaut strengthening slightly, but West Dome selling down a point and a half, and Goldale easing a point. Teck Hughes, Vipond and Tough Oakes all sold a point or more higher, and Hollinger, Lake Shore, Keely and Canadian Lorrain were also among strong stocks.

Stock Prices Went Down Despite Low Money Rate

NEW YORK, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Despite a reduction in the call money rate to four per cent., the lowest since October 20, stock prices turned reactionary to-day after an opening display of moderate strength. Short selling on the theory that the technical position of the market warranted a re-action and heavy profit-taking by wealthy individuals who delayed the sale of their speculative holdings so that the income taxes on the same would not be payable before March, 1927, were generally attributed as reasons for the decline.

Wheat Prices Set Back By Lower Prices Abroad

CHICAGO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Wheat prices underwent an early setback today influenced by downturns in quotations at Liverpool and Buenos Aires. Favorable weather in Argentina was a bearish factor. Besides, Argentine arrivals of new wheat were said to be increasing, and these were reports that Australia was offering wheat freely. Chicago opening prices, 1-2 cents to 1 1-8 lower, new style, May 181 3-4 to 182, and July 155 7-8 to 156, were followed by a material further drop and then something of a rally.

Corn and oats were relatively firm, although sympathizing with wheat, talk of probable Government aid to control surplus grain continued to receive attention. After opening 1-4 to 5-8c off, 87 3-4 to 87 5-8 cents, the corn market eased a little more and then began to recover.

Oats started at a shade to 1-8c lower, May 46c and held near to initial figures. Higher prices on hogs tended to lift the provision market.

Brazilian Leader To-day On Active and Firm Market

TORONTO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Brazilian was again the leader of an active and firm market on the Toronto Stock Exchange this morning. The tractions generally were among active leaders, though not all registered advances. Brazilian gained three-eighths at 83 3-4, but Twin City closed the morning unchanged, and Winnipeg eased a half point at 47 1-2. Canada Steamship Preferred advanced a point and a half at 57 1-2. Crow's Nest, Consolidated Smelters, and Atlantic Sugar were outstanding by reason of their weakness. Smelters sold down to 178, three points lower. Sugar eased seven-eighths, and Crow two points. Sugar Preferred, the Canners issues, F. N. Burt and British Columbia Fishing were all sold higher. The Banks and Mines were again prominent, the majority holding firm.

Raw Rubber Price Down Shares Follow In London

LONDON, Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press).—The raw rubber market seems haunted by the controversy going on between United States and British interests regarding its movements. The price of spot rubber in Mincing Lane dropped to 43 3-4 pence (87¼c) this morning, and June delivery to 38⅛ pence (77c), which correspondingly depressed rubber shares in the stock market.

MEMBERS COMING TO CAPITAL DAILY

Little Has Developed To Indicate Result of Complex Situation.

OTTAWA, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—With the opening of Parliament only two days away, the parliamentarians began to arrive in larger batches today, and the Capital is exhibiting its usual pre-sessional activity, but little has developed to indicate what will be the result of the first step towards a solution of the complex political situation. The Government is chiefly occupied with the preparation of the Speech from the Throne, which is undergoing some last minutes changes in Council. The Cabinet is meeting daily and sitting late. Another meeting is called for this afternoon.

On that day Francois will permit spectators to pinion him, using three pairs of handcuffs and one hundred feet of sash cord. He will then be drawn up feet foremost to the top of the Capitol Theatre, and hanging there head downward, will extricate himself his bonds.

The first dance and card party held under the auspices of St. Joseph's Hospital Alumnae, which took place at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last evening, was a pronounced success. There were over three hundred people in attendance, with 30 tables of cards played in the big upper hall, and the assembly hall on the lower floor crowded with those who enjoyed the dancing programme, enlivened by several novelty numbers. Ken Blood's Orchestra provided good music for the occasion. The dance hall was decorated very prettily with white and gold streamers and festoons and the long table upstairs from which supper was served was crossed with gold and white and arranged with yellow roses and yellow candles. Patronesses who were present were Mesdames F. P. McNulty, F. C. Neal, Jas. V. Gallivan, N. D. Buchanan, A. Moir, E. Wood. Prizes for bridge were won by Miss Anna Hurley and Dr. C. A. PLOT FOILED BY ABDICATION OF PRINCE CAROL Declaration of Son as Heir Stops Queen's Plan to Enthrone Brother.

LETTER FORGED.

Carol's Intimates Say Renunciation Written By Another to Further Plots.

LONDON, January 5. Canadian Press. — The final and successful renunciation of Crown Prince Carol of Rumania was accomplished, says a special correspondent of the Westminster Gazette, to counteract the plans of his mother, Queen Marie, and Premier Bratiano, to thwart his succession to the throne in favor of his brother Nicolas, and to insure the succession of his own son, Prince Michael.

The correspondent asserts that the inner history of Carol's repeated attempts at renunciation reveals the fact that as far back as his marriage to Mlle. Zyziz Lambrino, he was aware of the existence of a powerful movement in high court and political circles to enthrone Nicholas.

English educated, Prince Nicholas was always Queen Marie's favorite child, and more popular with the Rumanian people because he alone of the royal children spoke Rumanian fluently.

Carol's dramatic action in taking the matter into his own hands rather than allow the plans of the Queen and Bratiano slowly to mature, has dropped a bombshell in the Rumanian court and political circles.

CAROL IGNORANT OF LETTER.

MILAN, Jan. 5. — (United Press.) —The mystery surrounding the renunciation of Rumanian throne rights by Crown Prince Carol, grew deeper to-day when Carol's entourage informed the United Press that Carol himself was ignorant of the letter of abdication written to Bucharest and signed allegedly with Carol's name.

This revelation came only after the Bucharest House and Senate had accepted the renunciation and also accepted the law naming Carol's son Prince Mihai (Michael) as heir presumptive and providing for a regency in the event of King Ferdinand's death.

The United Press's informant said the letter of renunciation was written in Rumania, while Carol was in Italy. Carol's intimates are insistent that the letter was a forgery to further the political ambitions of Rumanian statesmen.

FASHION FANCIES

Heavy yellow crepe is the medium for the softly feminine negligee sketched above.

Delicate black lace makes a deep flounce at the bottom of the garment, and reappears at the ends of the wide scarf which is worn across the front of the neckline. The scarf is edged with yellow marabou.

The use of scarfs lends grace to evening gown and soft negligees. Numbers of the smart Southern wear frocks, too, make effective use of scarfs of self material.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

SHE DESCRIBES A SMART STREET COSTUME.

"I am going to make a Winter suit that follows my idea of what a smart suit should be, and I'm sure one of the first clients who sees it will wish to own it," Madame remarked to me this morning when I was chatting with her in her own office.

"A two-piece suit is rather a departure for you, isn't it?" I asked.

I knew that Madame had been centering all her activities on ensembles, and that it had been a long while since she had made a simple two-piece suit.

"That's just why I long to try something of that kind," Madame said. "I've made so many frocks with coats of the same length lately."

Accordingly I watched with interest the samples she sent for later in the morning, and I saw from the variety of them that she was designing in earnest.

Later in the day I begged her to let me see what she had done with the suit idea. I could see that she liked what she had done by the sparkle in her eye as she complied with my request.

What I saw sketched, with the samples pinned to the sketch, was one of the jauntiest little suits I have seen in some time.

"This sand duvetyn is the material," Madame explained.

I nodded my instant approval. She indicated another sample of dark brown duvetyn, and said:

"That's the color of the narrow insets, and they will be stitched along the sides with big stitches in brown wool, as you see in the sketch."

"Perfectly charming," I assured her.

"Then the fur will be dyed ermine," Madame explained. "I want it dyed the exact color of Summer ermine, which is so hard to get these days."

"Bobbed Hair" A DAZZLING MYSTERY STORY BY TWENTY FAMOUS AUTHORS

Copyright 1924-25, P. F. Collier & Son Co. and G. P. Putnam's Sons. "BOBBED HAIR" with Marie Prevost by a picturization of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

SYNOPSIS

Bing Carrington, after an exciting night of adventure with rum-runners in Long Island Sound, has swam to shore and has sought shelter at the home of one Merrill. Merrill, having lent him a suit of clothes which doesn't fit him at all, is rowing him out to another boat. Connemara Moore was to have announced her engagement last night to Carrington or Salt Adams, but stole away from Aunt Celimena's Connecticut home. And Bing has been searching for her.

"Fine! That will suit Bob. Lady in distress. He's got a pal named Lacy, Dave Lacy. Lives just a few miles down the shore. They're both keen about ladies in distress. Dave's got a boat called the Bloody Nuisance, and he's more or less in the service too, helping Bob whenever there's anything on. I mean when the smuggies have got anything on, not the ladies. I don't mean that either. You understand what I mean, Carrington. It's this blamed dog. He rattles me. Get out of this boat, Bugle! Home with you! Go home, Bugle! If you don't I'll rap you with one of these oars."

Bugle obligingly plunged overboard and started swimming toward the shore.

"I simply can't stand having that dog listening to everything I say," grumbled Mr. Merrill. "He's too darned smart for words."

A few minutes later the boat drew alongside the launch, and two men climbed aboard. Merrill routed his brother out of the cabin, and explanations followed.

"The first thing to do," said Bob Merrill briskly, "is to find out what's become of Lacy's Bloody Nuisance. We talked with him an hour or two ago, and everything was all right then. By gosh, there certainly has been action tonight, Mr. Carrington. I've heard guns popping all over the Sound like champagne corks at a bone-dry banquet."

They cruised for a short time without finding a sign of the Filomena or the Bloody Nuisance, but they did pick up an almost exhausted swimmer. He turned out to be a redheaded Scotchman named McTish. From him they learned of Connemara's escape from the Bloody Nuisance and her daring attempt to swim ashore, a distance of several miles; a feat McTish was confident she had accomplished, for he had followed some distance behind her for the better part of an hour. He spoke of her as the White Sister and explained his reason for appearing to have deserted her after they left the Bloody Nuisance together. Bing groaned. "But what [illegible] what the latest is. She may [illegible] bottom of the Sound. Oh!"

THE STORY UP TO NOW

ONCE THERE LIVED A LAZY, GOOD-NATURED MAN NAMED RIP VAN WINKLE. ONE EVENING IN THE MOUNTAINS HE FELL IN WITH SOME LITTLE MEN, WITH WHOM HE DRANK FROM A GREAT KEG. HE FELL ASLEEP. WHEN HE WOKE IT WAS BROAD DAY. HE FELT STIFF AND OLD AS HE WENT HOME. STRANGE PEOPLE MET HIM. HE FOUND HIS HOUSE IN RUINS. HE TOLD HIS STORY TO THE SKEPTICAL TOWNSPEOPLE. THEY POINTED OUT A LAZY YOUNG MAN WHO, THEY SAID, WAS RIP VAN WINKLE. AND HE FOUND HIS DAUGHTER, GROWN. SHE TOOK HIM HOME TO LIVE WITH HER.

and Brown had to be tied to keep him from jumping into the harbor. He and Danny Despair were bosom chums for several days.

"Who'll I get now! he asked with all the enthusiasm of a condemned murderer the day before the necktie party.

Wanted the Earth.

Jimmie Slattery, of Buffalo, was suggested when Brown offered "Red" Carr, of Buffalo, the same terms for Slattery as Harvey had accepted for Todd. Carr grew sarcastic and intimated that Brown was shy a lot of his alleys. He wanted everything but the new union station for "Slats" to fight Todd.

Go Get Greb.

"Go get Greb," said a Toronto newspaper man and Brown frothed. He thought he was being kidded. He went after "Boy" McCormick and "Young Bob" Fitzsimmons, but was told plainly that they did not have class enough for Todd. In despair he tried "Red" Mason for Greb. He didn't think he had any more chance than he would have of getting Jack Dempsey.

"Bring Todd in on the middleweight limit and give us 33 1-3 per cent. of the house with a $7,000 guarantee and Greb will fight Todd for you," said Mason. "That is final. There will be no bargaining."

Brown almost fell off the stool.

The price was away over his head. He did not think that his backers would stand for that touch.

But they did—and Greb and Todd will be here January 11.

The Greb Side.

Why did Greb consent to fight Todd here when the same fight would have drawn a $100,000 house in New York?

That is easy—Greb is sore on New York and claims that he cannot get fair treatment there and he will not fight there. Besides he is in the black books of the New York commission. They will not allow him to box in New York State until he fights Tiger Flowers for his title. Greb will not fight Flowers in New York State.

That is why Toronto gets a Madison Square Garden attraction.

Consented to a Raise.

The Ontario Athletic Commission thinks so well of this match that they have thrown off the price limit and informed the Shamrock A. C. that they can charge up to $15 for ringside seats.

This is a legitimate $2 to $15 show but the chances are that the Shamrocks will start at $1 and go to $10.

CARPENTIER ON THIRD INVASION IN FIVE YEARS

French Fighter Paolino Spanish Heavyweight in Negotiations.

WITH LOUIS FIRPO.

Carpentier Has Contract For Bout in San Francisco.

PARIS, January 5. Canadian Press. — Georges Carpentier, former light heavyweight champion of the world, sails Wednesday on the Majestic for his third fistic invasion of the United States within five years.

Carpentier announced that his prin cipal purpose in sailing for America at this time is to represent Paolino, the Spanish heavyweight, in Americ an negotiations until Franco's Descamps, manager for both, reaches the United States.

Descamps recently received an offer from Tex Rickard, the New York promoter, for a bout between Paolino, who is known in Europe as the "Tiger of the Pyrennes," and the "Wild Bull of the Pampas,' Luis Angel Firpo of Argentina.

The wily Francois considered the offer satisfactory, but as Paolino has been signed to meet Soldier Jones, the Canadian heavyweight, in Paris Feb. 2nd, he has delegated Carpentier to meet Rickard and sign final articles on behalf of the Spaniard.

The former light heavyweight champion himself showed offers to meet either Jack Delaney or Paul Berlenbach, the present champion of his class, but was loath to say he was ready to accept either offer. He already has a contract made with a Los Angeles promoter to meet the winner of a bout between Sailor Huffman and Jimmy Delaney, and would prefer to go through with this fight before tackling Jack Delaney, the tough French Canadian, or Berlenbach.

Carpentier said, however, that it was quite unlikely he would do any fighting in America except that he would carry out his Los Angeles contract if called upon to do so.

STILL IN THE RING.

Mike McTigue, who lost the world's light-heavyweight boxing title to Paul Berlanbach last summer, has earned another chance at the crown by his defeat of the sensational negro, "Tiger" Flowers of Atlanta.

COLTS AND ALERTS COMMENCE SERIES

Rats and Warsaw Sextettes Will Duel to the Death on Friday Night.

LAKEFIELD, Jan. 5.—The first games in the District Hockey League will be played this week. On Tuesday night at 7.30 the Colts and Alerts clash and on Friday night the Rats and Warsaw meet. The Alerts are a newly formed aggregation and are being watched with curiosity and interest. The Colts, last year's champions, are already popular. Warsaw, team champions for 1923 and 1924, is practically intact with one notable exception, their trusty goalie, Ralph Wasson, who has gone to the States. The Rink Rats played two years in the Junior League, winning a good reputation for fast, clean hockey and their entry into adult ranks is a matter of local interest.

Pittsburgh Expect To Win Pennant Again This Year

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 5.—The Pittsburgh Pirates of 1926, with minor touching up, have full confidence that they again will capture the gold and glory of National League and world's series victories. The 1925 outfit will be virtually intact unless Hal Rhyne, second baseman, and Paul Waner, outfielder, expensive products of the San Francisco club of the Pacific Coast League, show sufficient ability to break into the regular line-up.

Outside of these two mooted positions, McKechnie's main attention will be devoted to his hurling staff, which gave a good account of itself last season, but which may require some bolstering for 1926.

SYRACUSE GETS TROTTING PLUM

New Hambletonian Stake Worth $70,000 For New York State Fair.

THREE YEAR OLDS.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 5. — Canadian Press. — The new Hambletonian Stake, valued at approximately $70,000, the richest ever to be raced by three year old trotters, has been awarded to the New York State Fair and will be raced at Syracuse.

The New York State Fair, sponsor of the Grand Circuit Syracuse meetings, outbid Kalamazoo and Atlanta, getting the stake by bidding $8000.

Announcement of the award was made at the 54th annual meeting of the Grand Circuit stewards here on Monday. The circuit's rules and schedules committee met behind closed doors, but declined to make any announcement pending submission of their recommendations to the stewards at the final meeting to-day.

Reports that Indianapolis and Milwaukee would drop out were dispelled when their representatives applied for dates. As far as could be learned, Atlanta did not seek dates. That a meeting would be held at that track was indicated, however, when its management bid for the Hambletonian.

Whether Milwaukee will obtain dates is problematical. That city applied for the week of August 30th, which also was sought by Syracuse, and as the New York track is one of the oldest in the Grand Circuit, it was likely that it would be favored.

It is probable that the season will admit at North Rendall, July 5th, the horses then moving to Toledo for a week's meeting opening July 12th, Kalamazoo following with a week starting July 19th. This leaves the week of July 26 and four weeks in August open, preceding the Syracuse meeting. One of the August weeks will go to North Randall for its second meeting. Indianapolis seeks the week of September 6th, this to be followed by two weeks at Lexington, from where the horses would be taken to Atlanta.

George Clark Jones is the latest addition to the Canadian ranks of professional golfers. Jones leaves England for Toronto on January 7, and on arrival will take over the golf school of the St. Andrew's Golf Club, Toronto. OMEMEE WILL HAVE FAST SOCCER CLUB

Manager Seeks Peterborough Players—District League.

OMEMEE, Jan. 5.—Omemee is to have a soccer club this summer of some standing, there having arrived in the village, among the newcomers, a few soccer players of ability. Some of the players have worn the colors of well-known clubs, such as Toronto Scottish, Hamilton City, Oshawa Maroons, Oakville, Mimico, Lingfield Rovers, Toronto and Sons of Scotland, Montreal. We have also in our midst, the president and manager of Oakville soccer club, Mr. A. Leiper, who is well-known in Toronto and Hamilton district soccer circles, he having been for some time on the H. and D. Executive.

Mr. Leiper is out to bring the best brand of soccer to the district, and would appreciate communication with any players in the Peterboro district who are desirous of throwing in their lot with this newly formed organization. It is the intention of the Omemee club to link up with the best league in Lindsay or Peterboro district, also to enter the various competitions, such as the Connaught Cup, Ontario Cup and other emblems and trophies to be played for around here.

Mr. A. Leiper would appreciate communication with any of the officials of any other association or league and get a line up on their constitution.

OSHAWA JUNIORS SWAMP PORT HOPE

Motor Town Kids Were on Long End of 8-2 Score.

OSHAWA, Ont., Jan. 5 (Special) —Harold Lake's local entry in the junior series of the O.H.A., said it with flowers yesterday evening by presenting Mayor-elect Robert D. "Bob" Preston with a floral horseshoe when he faced the puck at the opening game of the local schedule and immediately after started in to impress the big chief of Oshawa that they were also good campaigner by trouncing Peter Brown's Port Hope homebrews by 8-2, scoring four goals to the Hopers' none in the first period, F. Conlin getting the first on a pass from brother Bill; Doc Rowden notched number two thirty seconds after on a long shot from outside the defence, Parrington took the puck right through the Port Hope team and scored the third while F. NEW TEAM FOR JUNIOR PETES

LOTS OF SPEED

To-night at the Brock street arena the Junior "Petes" of 1926 make their bow to the hockey public with a brand new team, from goal out to centre ice. The players, selected from a squad of 25 candidates, had their final workout yesterday evening, when the team for the opening game with Markham was picked. The management have been working for the past two weeks with players under seventeen years of age, and the probabilities are that the regulars will be made up of youngsters eligible for three more seasons in the Junior series, and they are all good hockey players.

Markham is reported to have a big and fast team. The locals will rely on speed, of which they have abundance, and combination plays, the importance of which has been drilled into them during their training.

Hockey fans who are interested in the youngsters should make an extra effort and be out to-night for the opening game.

ALL SAINTS' A.A. ANNUAL MEETING

SUCCESSFUL YEAR

The annual meeting of All Saints' Athletic Association was held last night in the club room in the parish hall. The retiring president, Horace Ashmore, was in the chair. After reports showing the club to be in good condition, the following officers were elected:

Honorary President—Rev. J. Douglas Paterson.

Honorary Vice-Presidents—Messrs. C. W. Wiggins, George Gimblett, senior, A. Hope, Grant Richardson and the Church Wardens.

Honorary Secretary Treasurer—James H. Price.

Past President —Horace E. Ashmore.

President—George Gimblett, junior.

Vice-President — Melville McNeely.

Secretary-Treasurer — Charles Thomas.

SPORT NOTES

St. Louis, Mo.—Two important announcements affecting the St. Louis Browns were made over the week-end by Phil D. Ball, president of the club. The first was that Ernie Nevers, star football man at Leland Stanford University, and now a professional, had been signed by Manager George Sisler. Sisler is understood to have out-bid four other major league clubs in signing Nevers. The other announcement was to the effect that the Browns would again train at Tarpon Springs, Fla., this year.

"Duke" Keats, well-known Western Canada league star, has hit his stride, and critics all over the western circuit are hailing him as the "class" of the league."

Sault Ste. Marie News: "While the management of the Sault Greyhounds realize the need of more substitutes to bolster up the team's front line, it would be difficult for them to secure players of sufficiently high caliber to make good in the Central Hockey League at this late date. A good left wing and a good centre man would help matters out a whole lot, but then it is just a question whether the local club could finance such a big roster. At best the club would be fortunate if it finishes the season without a deficit. While all local games will be well attended it must be remembered that the long trips around the league cost real money, and other teams will pull crowds anywhere from 4,000 to 6,000 people. The best the Greyhounds can count on is a scant 2,000 people. Lessard and Woodruff are playing poorly, and Phillips is carrying the burden on the firing line."

Importance Attached To Report in View of Rumors of Wedding.

FOR PUBLICATION.

LONDON, Jan. 5 (United Press)—In connection with rumors of a possible Royal alliance between the Prince of Wales and the Scandinavian Princess Astrid, considerable importance was attached to-day to a report that Queen Mary recently ordered forty photographs of the Princess for initialing. It is customary for picture agencies here not to publish any Royal pictures without obtaining the initialed approved of the Queen.

Incidentally it is learned that Queen Mary herself approved the publication of the much-discussed picture of the Prince playing a feminine role in a play aboard H.M.S. Repulse in the course of his recent South American tour.

THANK YOU FROM AN OLD READER

January 1st, 1926.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir.—Just a line from an old reader to wish you a Very Happy New Year, and to say I (for one) appreciate The Examiner very much. It's certainly a good readable paper and it's getting more interesting as the years go by.

What I go for first are the notes by W.P. They are always interestings, as are also the editorials

I am from Old England, but love Canadia and its people. They have been kind and good always to me.

BOYS AND DADS HOLD BANQUET AT ALL SAINTS'

Father and Son Banquet Was Attended by Many Members of Church.

GOOD SPEAKERS

Fine Addresses, With Plenty to Eat, Made Gathering a Great Success for All.

Three hundred of the boys of All Saints' Sunday School and their fathers gathered in the parish hall last night at a father and son banquet, which was one of the most successful gatherings ever held in the parish. The eats, so dear to the boys, both old and young, were wholesome and plentiful, the songs were full of pep, and the speeches were short and interesting. R. J. Devey led the community singing, and eight members of his Bible class, styling themselves All Saints' Male Voice Choir, rendered a number of songs under his able direction. Rev. J. Douglas Paterson, the rector, was the chairman, and the speakers were Dr. Murray Fraser, Rev. Ralph Adye and H. E. Ashmore.

In his opening remarks, the chairman asked the boys and men to support three things, the church and Sunday school, the boys' club for the older boys and the Boy Scout movement for the younger boys.

Dr. Murray Fraser, district Scoutmaster, spoke to the boys about the effort to start scouting. He said that the difficulty had been to get leaders, but that there were now two men trained to take charge of a troop in All Saints' Parish, and it would soon be started. He appealed to the boys to support the troop, and to the men to support the troop and also to enroll for the next leaders' course, which starts on January 20.

Gordon Dobbin, a member of the Boys' Club, was the next speaker. He expressed, on behalf of the boys, their pleasure in having their fathers present, and thanked the men for coming out. He also thanked Dr. Fraser for his address. Frank H. Dawson spoke on behalf of the men, stating their pleasure at being present, and saying that most of them had had no chance to stay away, so insistent were the boys that they should come.

Horace Ashmore, president of the Boys' Club since its formation nearly four years ago, and now a divinity student at Wycliffe College, was the next speaker. He spoke of the work accomplished by the club, and urged the fathers to support it as an organization where their boys would have good companionship in their amusements.

Rev. Ralph Adye of Kinmount was the principal speaker. He said that what was needed was to give the boys some ideal in life, with something to do. He said that the women and girls were naturally religious, and did a great deal of the work of the church, but that the boys and men should be given some interest in the work.

"Each boy is estimated by the Government," said Mr. Adye, "to be worth $2,500. At that rate the boys here are worth half a million dollars. If you men had that much money in your possession you would see that every dollar of it was being used to the best advantage. Why not, then, look after the great sum represented here, and see that your boy who is worth so much is not out dissipating his value until he is worth only twenty-five cents instead of twenty-five hundred dollars?"

The speaker said that the boys of to-day are the congregation and nation of to-mrrow, the fathers of the race to come. The wail had always been raised, as it was now, that the younger generation was going to perdition when it swept away some of the shams and hypocricies of its elders. He said that it was the duty of the church to say to the young people, "We will show you the right way of living," and they would be found flocking into the churches where it was preached.

"The parson has a great many things to do," said the speaker. "He has to preach and to visit, to keep his own affairs straight and to devote a little time to his family, and to keep the books of about half the parish. Yet people ask, 'What is the parson doing?' when there is some work to be done for the boys and girls. The question is," said the speaker, "what is the congregation doing?"

Mr. Adye urged the fathers to get in touch with their boys, and the boys to get in touch with their fathers, so that the boys would go to the fathers with their troubles.

A vote of thanks to the ladies who prepared the banquet was moved by George Gimblett, Junior, and seconded by Fred Holmes.

PROVIDE RELIEF FOR THE MINERS

Looting Stores Was Stopped When Mayor Promised Help.

GOVERNMENT ACTS.

HALIFAX, Jan. 5. — (Canadian Press).—At a meeting of the Government of Nova Scotia, held here yesterday, it was decided to endorse the bonds of the town of Glace Bay to an amount that would relieve the situation brought about by unemployment at the collieries of the British Empire Steel Corporation; to urge upon the Canadian National Railways the desirability of placing orders for coal in excess of immediate requirements if necessary, and to invite President Wolvin to cooperate in every way possible in amelioration of the condition.

Men, women and children, members of the mining community of Glace Bay and New Aberdeen, to the number of several thousand, resumed last night the looting of provision stores, and five places of business in the two towns had been looted before Mayor Morrison, of Glace Bay, succeeded in getting the ear of the mob and persuading them to return to their homes on a promise that relief would be granted all bona fide instances of want on application at the Town Hall to-day.

Theatre

AT THE CAPITOL

"THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA."

"The Phantom of the Opera," the feature picture at the Capitol Theatre for the first half of this week, is an extraordinary production in more ways than one. Starring Lon Chaney, who habitually goes in for spectacular ..., it shows him in one of the characterizations that he appears to delight ..., a monster of ugliness. Unlike Quasimodo in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," a picture in which he played the part of a benevolent monstrosity, he enacts in "The Phantom of the Opera," the role of a madman, escaping from his asylum at Devil's Island, near Paris, and returning to the city itself to haunt the environs and the underground passages of the Paris Opera.

Chaney's flair for the outlandish in his acting has a wonderful scope in this picture. Attired as Mephistopheles, a "Red Death," he stands on the highest pinnacle of the Opera roof, his red cloak billowing about him, and listens to the conversation of the lovers below. He, a master of the Black Art, mesmerizes the attention of the heroine. Christine Daae, a part taken by Mary Philbin, and sends commands to her through the hollow passages of the wall about her room. Designing to secure the love of the girl by hypnotizing her, he gives her a musical training by thought suggestion, and arranges matters so that she takes the place of the prima donna in the production of "Faust" by the Paris Opera company. As the dreaded "phantom of the Opera," the Stranger who comes on his victims in the dark and leaves them dangling to unexpected posts, he strikes terror to the heart of management and players alike, and one notable scene shows the abduction of Christine, while playing "Marguerite," as the lights of the immense house flicker and fade and the central chandelier crashes into the dense crowd below.

Through gloomy subterranean passages the madman takes the girl and into underground chambers where he begs her to give him her love. Christine tears the mask from his face and reveals one of those moments of thrilling surprise which Chaney delights in. The madman plays for her, and the girl once more comes under the spell of his hypnotic power. It is only after a series of peculiar and startling incidents, including a presentation of two men dying of heat in a hidden torture chamber, that the story moves to a triumphant conclusion.

Screened in romantic surroundings, the Paris Opera and its corridors funishing the majority of the backgrounds, with a powerful madman masquerading as a ghost and a love story in which a bewitched girl struggle for release, rounded out with numerous mysterious and exciting episodes, "The Phantom of the Opera" is an out-of-the-ordinary and intriguing spectacle. Its colored scenes, of which they are many, are very beautiful and add to the romantic character of the story, the art of Lon Chaney is at its best in the masterful characterization of Erik, and Mary Philbin, although somewhat stagey in her acting, is a very satisfactory type of heroine. Norman Kerry makes a disappointing lover, spineless and inclined to hesitate at the wrong moment but the supporting cast is an excellent one, and the costuming and staging in keeping with the weird theme of the tale.

The orchestral accompaniment, arranged by Miss F. Gladman, and played by an augmented number of musicians, is extremely good. The overture, "The Student Prince," received much applause last evening.—Jeannette.

HYPNOTIST MINDREADING and VAUDEVILLE AT CAPITOL THURSDAY, FRIDAY, AND SATURDAY.

When "Francois," the mental marvel, opens his three days' engagement at the Capitol Thursday, Peterboro audiences will have the time of their lives. There's mystery, there's thrills and there's plenty of laughs. It's called the show of a thousand laughs, and for those who have not seen a hypnotic show for years, and those who have never seen one, there is a treat of hilarity. If Francois don't mystify you, then you are impossible. If he can't entertain you, then you can't be entertained. On Thursday afternoon Francois will give a demonstration of abilities by hypnotising a local young man in the window adjoining the theatre, and induce him to play solitaire for several hours, winning every game. This is but one of hundreds of tests that he uses to amuse as well as mystify the throngs at each performance. One of his many feats new to Peterboro audiences will be the scene from the famous book entitled Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde, with his class while hypnotised. This no doubt is one of the most interesting as well as educating feats ever performed with a subject while under a hypnotic spell.

AT THE REGENT

"MADAM BEHAVE" DELIGHTFUL COMEDY.

Latest Al Christie Screen Farce Featuring Julian Eltinge and Ann Pennington, Heartily Received.

It is axiomatic that one must laugh to grow fat. Anything that contributes to the gayety of nations and men is a boon. In this sense, therefore, a good comedy is a public blessing.

Just such a screen comedy is "Madam Behave," an Al Christie production which has been justly termed "A Cousin to Charley's Aunt," and which was shown with emphatic success at the Regent Theatre yesterday. It is a delightful contribution to the mirth of humanity.

It is a farce in skirts—a laughmaker of exceptional worth. It completes a triumvirate of Al Christie international farces. While "Charley's Aunt" was English by history and tradition, and "Seven Days" purely American, "Madam Behave" is a French farce by Jean Arlette, and it is unquestionably one of the most laughable creations ever seen on the local screen.

The principal comedians in this entertaining production are Julian Eltinge, woman impersonator, and Ann Pennington, jazz dancer—two of the best known figures of the American stage and screen. They are supported by a galaxy of screen artists, including Lionel Belmore, Jack Duffy, David James, Tom Wilson, Evelyn Francisco and Stanhope Wheatcroft. It was directed by Scott Sidney, the man whose brilliant sense of comedy helped make "Charley's Aunt" the worldbeater it is.

The double-wedding sequence at the finish is done in techni-color and makes a charming and happy climax for this feast of fun. Don't miss it!

AT THE GRAND

Pleasing as ever in its delightful musical score, entertaining in its clever lyrics, and the humour of its book and presented by a company of artists who evidently loved their work, because they felt it was well worth doing, "The Miakdo," Gilbert and Sullivan's most successful and popular comic opera, was a source of constant delight to the audience which saw the production of the fine work by the Brandon Brothers Company, at the Grand last night.

This organization is new to eastern playgoers but will be sure of a hearty welcome should it return to Peterboro. It is made up of adequate entertainers who show a refreshing interest in every detail of the performance with the result that not only is the beauty of the Sullivan score but the wit and satire of the Gilbert lines brought out to the fullest extent. It was a treat to hear every word of the clever lyrics, and it was a treat also to note the little bits of business by whic the full effect was produced. The company not only is clever individually but bears every evidence of being carefully drilled by a director with brains. Rarely has Peterboro seen a better Gilbert and Sullivan produuction than was given here last night by this altogether capable organization, which, while not large, had a cast of accomplished principals and a cho is which not only sings well but seemed delighted to do so.

The Yum Yum of Esther Stryker, was one of the bright spots in the presentation. This clever young artist acted her role delightfully and her vocal numbers were full of charm—notably her rendition of "The Moon and I," in the second act. Chas. Ross was a likeable Nanki Poo, with a pleasing tenor voice, which he used to good advantage.

The big comedy part in "The Mikado" of course is that of Ko Ko, and it is difficult to recall a more clever performance of the role here than that given by Fred Kidney last night. His wonderfully expressive face, the clever "business" he used, the effective interpretation of his songs, all combined to make his work a memorable feature. Clever, too, was the acting of Chester Bright as Poo Bah, a role full of meat for a capable artist, and Mr. Bright extracted every ounce of fun by his picture of this remarkable part.

Jessie Evans, the possessor of a fine contralto, was a thoroughly adequate Katisha. V. A. Bird did well as the Mikado, and other roles were in good hands. The ensemble musical numbers showed precision of attack and splendid balance.

The score was as popular as ever. "A Wandering Minstrel." "Madrigal." "The Flowers that Bloom in the Spring," "Tit Willow," "I've Got Him on the List," "The Punishment Fits the Crime," and other favorites, were were given in capital fashion, and were enthusiastically encored.

Those who saw last night's performance would welcome a return visit from this capable organization.

Miss Evelyn Rose Seriously Hurt; Coach Rolls over Embankment in Derailment of Maritime Train

Daughter of Peterborough Pastor in Springhill Hospital, Nova Scotia—Reports on Condition Are Conflicting, But Injuries Are Considered Serious.

MARITIME EXPRESS DERAILED.

Pullman Broke Loose and Turned Completely Over, Landing in Mass of Wreckage in Ditch—Miss Rose Buried Under Debris and Rescue Was Difficult.

Miss Evelyn Rose, daughter of Rev. Dr. C. W. Rose and Mrs. Rose, of Murray street Baptist Church, was seriously injured in a train wreck at Salt Springs, Nova Scotia, yesterday. When The Examiner telephoned the hospital at Springhill Junction at 2 o'clock this morning Miss Rose was reported to be resting comfortably, without grave injury. Later despatches today, however, report that she has suffered a serious blow on the head, and internal injuries are feared. Miss Rose was returning to Acadia University after spending the Christmas vacation at her home here.

HALIFAX, N.S., Jan. 6 (special despatch to The Examiner) Three passengers, including Miss Evelyn Rose, daughter of the Rev. C. W. Rose of Peterborough, were seriously injured yesterday when the Maritime Express was wrecked near Salt Springs Nova Scotia. A score of people suffered minor injuries when the pullman, diner, and first and second class carriages jumped from the track and plunged into a ditch. The pullman broke loose from the other cars and turned completely over, landing in a mass of wreckage at the foot of the ditch.

THE INJURED

MISS EVELYN ROSE, Peterborough; head injuries, severe shock, and possible internal injuries.

William J. Ross, Halifax; cuts on head and arm.

George L. Green, Sandy Point; two ribs broken, hip injured, several cuts.

Miss Marguerite Crocker, Millertown; cuts on head and back.

O. Fortier, Toronto; cuts on head and hands, back injured.

M. B. Davis, Halifax.

Twenty others suffered minor bruises and injuries.

Three passengers were seriously injured. W. J. Ross, sleeping car conductor, George Green, Shelburne, N. S., and Evelyn Rose, of Peterborough. Of the three she is the most seriously injured. She is suffering from shock and the result of a severe blow on the head, and possible internal injuries. Miss Rose with the other two passengers who were seriously injured, was rushed to All Saints' Hospital, at Springhill.

The wreck is believed to be due to a broken rail and is the worst one in Nova Scotia in many years.

Pullman Turned Over.

The Pullman, diner and first and second coaches left the rails.

Miss Rose was returning from Peterboro where she had spent her vacation and was on her way to

Prince Is Not Engaged To Princess Astrid—Yet

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 6.—(United Press).—Replying to an inquiry, the Master of Ceremonies of the Swedish court telegraphed the United Press that rumors of the engagement of the Prince of Wales and Princess Astrid of Sweden were unfounded.

A report of a forthcoming visit of Princess Astrid to England had recently given rise to rumors that this might foreshadow her marriage to the heir of the Throne of England.

PROGRESSIVES OF BOTH GROUPS WILL PRESENT A UNITED FRONT IS DECISION M ADE AT MEETING

Common Basis For Action in the House Decided On.

TO SIT TOGETHER.

Probably on Government Side of Chamber—Executive Appointed.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6. — (Canadian Press).—The Progressives, those of the so-called "ginger group" included, will present a united front when Parliament opens. Yesterday's conferences, which were attended by Robert Forke, the Progressive leader, members of the main body of the party and of the "ginger group," were successful. A common basis for action was arrived at, according to H. E. Spencer, member for Battle River, and newly elected Chief Whip of the Progressive party.

Consequently the members of the third party in the Commons will act together on questions of importance during the session. All the Progressives will be seated in the same part of the Commons chamber, probably below the members of the Government party to the right of the Speaker.

At yesterday's meeting an Executive Committee to take charge of the affairs of the re-united party during the session was appointed.

STRIKE PARLEY STILL WITHOUT REAL PROGRESS

Tuesday's Conference Followed Discussions of Previous Sessions.

STILL DEADLOCKED.

First Meeting Since New Year's Recess—No Change in Attitude.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—"Still deadlocked" aptly describes the situation in the negotiations between anthracite miners and operators who are attempting to end the hard coal strike now in its fifth month.

Shortly before seven o'clock last night, after a session of nearly five hours, announcement was made that the joint conference of six miners and six operators had adjourned until 11 o'clock Wednesday morning. With this announcement came the following message from the conference room:

"The conference met and continued consideration of the possibility of reaching an agreement. The discussion was along the lines of previous sessions."

The conference under the leadership of W. W. Inglis, for the operators, and President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, was resumed yesterday afternoon after a recess taken New Year's Eve.

Before entering the meeting each side expressed itself in the strongest terms that no concessions had been decided upon and that there was no change in their attitude on the fundamentals at issue.

Snake bit man; man bit snake; both are dead

TOKIO, Jan. 6. — (United Press). — To show his control over the snakes used in his medicine making, Koguma Chu, a Nagoya snake doctor, did a snake-charming act in his show window. Suddenly as he put the snake into his mouth, it bit his tongue. Koguma bit the snake's head off, killing it immediately, but Koguma lasted only until the next morning. Snakes figure largely in the popular Japanese pharmacopoea and there are restaurants where snakes are served.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—A back draft from a furnace forcing coal gas fumes into the home of Mrs. M. Cloutier here this evening, nearly caused the suffocation of four persons. Miss Mabel M. Dean was unconscious when discovered, Miss Bella Shane was only semi-conscious, while Mrs. Cloutier and her daughter, Glenrita, were only partly overcome by the fumes.

Sweetlove Name Of Steward For Berlins' Honeymoon

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Jan. 6 — (Canadian Press). — The steward of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Berlin on the steamship Leviathan on which they sail for their honeymoon trip Saturday, will be Robert Sweetlove. Berlin thinks the name appropriate for a honeymoon steward. The marriage in New York of Berlin, jazz song writer, and Ellin MacKay, young society belle and millionaire's daughter, has created a lot of interest. Mrs. Irving Berlin earnestly and wistfully hopes for a pardon from her father, Clarence H. MacKay, and, if necessary, she will seek it.

To-day it was reported that the door of the MacKay home was definitely closed to Mrs. Berlin, and she must be cut off from the $50,000,000 MacKay estate.

COBOURG WOMAN DEAD.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 6.—(Canadian Press.)—The woman described as Mrs. Joseph Salvana, who died at the Civic Hospital Monday as a result of acute heart trouble, has been identified by the hospital authorities and the police department conjointly as Mrs. Gertie Ostrom, of Cobourg, Ont.

CAROL REFUSED TO HELP MOTHER RETAIN PREMIER

Is Opposed to Rule of Small Clique Based on Graft.

KEPT FROM COUNCIL.

Refers Obliquely to Bratiano as Demagogue—Ready To Lead Movement

PARIS, Jan. 6. — (Canadian Press).—Prince Carol of Rumania renounced his rights to the throne on account of political differences between his mother, Queen Marie, and himself. This is revealed in an interview Carol gave just before he left Rumania for England for the funeral of his grandmother, Dowager Queen Alexandra. The interview was given to a Danish newspaperman, Karl Bogholm. It shows that Bucharest's efforts to declare the renunciation due solely to personal reasons is untrue, and that Carol renounced the throne because he refused longer to support his mother in keeping Premier Bratiano in office. It also indicates he is ready to be the leader of a new movement.

The interview reveals a thoughtful man. Carol presents himself as a liberal monarchist intensely interested in educating his people and opposed to the rule of a small clique based on graft. His opinions had long been contrary to those of his father and mother, and for nearly a year he had been excluded from Royal Councils.

Referring obliquely to M. Bratino as he did repeatedly, the Prince said:

"Public morality has been lowered since the war, and too many politicians and so-called statesmen forget completely that they are here to serve the country and the people. Never has the demoralization been so prevalent as at this moment.

"I hate demagogues and selfish politicians. The only way to get rid of them is to educate the people to govern themselves."

Germans Wakened By Shock When Quake Shakes Cologne

LONDON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—An earthquake shock caused many people living along the Rhine to awaken from sleep early to-day and rush out of their houses to the open spaces, says an Exchange Telegraph despatch from Cologne.

The shock was felt generally throughout Western Germany, and even in Hamburg. No damage was reported.

Ballot Box May Contain a Deputy's Spectacles; Cannot Be Opened Or Even Shaken For Six Weeks

Being an assistant in the business of electing candidates for municipal honors isn't always a sinecure. Besides the wear and tear on the nerves and temper of the long day of excitement, there are other hazards, as one man who helped in the recent municipal contest has found out. For his labor on that occasion as deputy returning officer, he will receive six or seven dollars which would be velvet if he hadn't contrived to lose a twelve dollar pair of spectacles in the rush of the day. The only possible place that these "specs" may yet be found is in the ballot box, and that can't be opened for six weeks. So, in the meantime, if he wishes to have his eyes functioning properly, he will have to replace the glasses and spend his stipend and almost as much more, on their purchase. If they are in the ballot box, he will have two pairs of glasses, it is true, but only one pair is required, so he's distinctly out of luck in any case.

City Clerk Armstrong would not allow the box to be shaken to ascertain whether the spectacles are really there. The box must not be tampered with, the rules say.

Coal Miners Charge Deliberate Witholding of Information in Conference.

FROM LEWIS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6th (United Press)—Coal operators were blamed by the miners today for alleged withholding from the public of information as to developments in the joint conference of miners and mine owners now being held here in an attempt to settle the anthracite coal strike the mine owners are deliberately withholding detailed information on the negotiations, a spokesman for President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers said.

Letter Carriers' Overseer Accused Of Stealing Mail

MOOSE JAW, Sask., Jan. 6. (Canadian Press).—Otto Wedman, 47, for the past eight years overseer of letter carriers at the local post office, was yesterday remanded by Magistrate H. S. Lemon, in City Police Court, to stand trial at the next sitting of Criminal Court on charges of stealing parcels from the mails. He was released on bail of $1,000 in two sureties.

Wedman has been employed at Moose Jaw Post Office for the past 15 years.

Packages of mail, alleged to have been taken from the after-Christmas rush of registered mail, were found in his possession at the time of his arrest on December 29, police and postal officials testified at the preliminary hearing.

ANNUAL POULTRY SHOW OPENS WITH NINE HUNDRED ENTRIES

Judge Enthuses Over Fine Quality of Birds on Display.

BARRED ROCKS EXCEL.

Several Interesting Demonstrations Add to Attraction of Exhibition This Year.

The annual show of the Peterborough Poultry Association opened yesterday in the Armouries building, with a total of nearly nine hundred entries in the different classes. Peterborough always has a good show," said one of the judges last evening, Mr. George Robertson of the Dominion Experimental Farm at Ottawa, who, half way through inspection of the birds, was enthusing over some of the fine White Leghorns on view. The other judge is Mr. G. J. Lawrie of Maple.

Peterborough has reason to be proud of its Poultry Show, inasmuch as so many of the Poultry Associations of the district have gone out of business in late years, while the local exhibition still continues to flourish and expand. An item mention by Mr. George Paxman, the genial treasurer and superintendent of the association, to whose enterprise and unfailing interest much of the success of the local show is due, is the increasing interest being taken by young men of the rural districts in this neighborhood, as proved by many more entries from these parts in this year's exhibition.

From out of town, the main exhibitors are W. H. Bowhey of Agincourt ,showing Bantams and Rhode Island Reds; Norman Murray of Galt, Blue Andalusians; F. G. Bouskill of Port Hope, Anconas; A. J. Ward of Stouffville, Buff Rocks and Jersey Giants; Stinson and Whitefield of Cobourg, Barred Rocks and Brown Leghorns; W. J. Leaped To Rescue Man; Bystander Stole Specs

NEW YORK, N.Y., Jan. 6 (United Press) — Another "meanest thief" has appeared here. Father Joseph J. McGowan, Welfare Island chaplain, leaped into the East River and rescued a man from drowning. Before he jumped he handed his glasses, valued at $12, to a bystander.

When he reached shore, Father McGowan could find neither bystander nor glasses.

DR. F. NEAL AND MRS. W. MORRIS RETIRE FROM EDUCATION BOARD

Ten Years' and Six Years' Service Respectively Complimented By Chairman.

MANY CHANGES. . .

Both Retiring Members Tell of Advancement in Educational Systems.

After a service of ten years on the Board of Education, Dr. F. C. Neal relinquished officially his tenure of office at the regular meeting held last night.

The departure of Dr. Neal and Mrs. W. R. Morris drew from the chairman, J. A. McKone, a note of regret at their passing from the field.

Mrs. Morris said she was sorry to leave the Board, but that in her six-year term she had seen many changes, which she thought were to the advantage of educational interests. She said that the matter on which she had concentrated did not require her attention further, as the plans for the new school were prepared and ready for use. She paid a tribute to E. Roland Wilson who, she was sure, would be of great assistance in furthering the aims of the Board. "A superintendent of the actual construction should be a member of the Board, and as she would not have been suitable, she thought that the new member would be of value in that regard. Mrs. Morris concluded by reading a letter from Dr. Merchant, which concerned the extension of secondary education.

Dr. Neal, in reply to the tribute paid by Mr. McKone, said that he too had lived to witness many changes, that he had seen many of the basic rules and regulations supplanted by others which were for the benefit of education.

The business of the evening was despatched in the usual characteristic manner, and included the hearing of the annual report and the report of receipts and expenditures by Mrs. Morris, as well as attendance reports for the public schools and Collegiate Institute..

On motion by E. B. Fowler and Dr. Neal, L. D. W. Magie was reappointed to the Public Library Board for a term of three years, from February 1, 1926.

The following is a report of school attendance:

Blames Luxuries For Colds One Chief Cause Of Illness

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The luxuries of modern living with which civilized man has surrounded himself are in large part to blame for the sickness known as the "common cold," which causes more illness annually than any other malady, Dr. Isaac A. Abt said in a report of his investigation of colds made for the Gorgas Memorial Institute.

Vaccines for the treatment of colds were termed "of very doubtful value to say the least," and "not based on accurate scientific knowledge.

"It would be important to determine the causes which lead to the occurrence of this widespread affliction," said the report. "It is obvious that if the causes were definitely known the prevention and treatment would be simplified.

"The luxuries with which civilized man has surrounded himself are not unmixed blessings, and it is safe to say that these artificial protections have diminished the resistance of human beings against colds."

RADIO FOR DEAF CONSIDERED AS POSSIBLE HELP

Winnipeg Records Two Cases in Which Hearing Was Restored.

ACTION POSTPONED.

Manitoba School For Deaf Seeking Conclusive Proof.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 6. (Canadian Press).—Installation of radio receiving apparatus in the Manitoba School for the Deaf is under consideration by the Provincial Government. Such action awaits only conclusive proof that such would be beneficial, according to Dr. R Fletcher, Deputy Minister of Education.

The authorities, while inclined to postpone action pending expert opinion of the curative influences of radio, have been aroused by two bona fide cases of deafness, which have resulted in the restoration of the auditory faculties through the use of radio.

Many children at the Provincial School for the Deaf have been listening-in, purely as an experiment, Thomas Rodwell, superintendent, declares. Concentration of sound, he said, would make it possible for those almost deaf to distinguish between sounds, but as nothing extraordinary had yet been obtained, he did not think it right to raise false hopes in those afflicted.

The principle of enabling deaf persons to hear by means of vibrations had been tested by the medical profession, according to local specialists. The results, however, had proved generally disappointing.

A new type of aeroplane which has just been tested has its wings so constructed that, if a breakdown occurs, they form a parachute.

QUEEN'S ENDOWMENT.

Campaign Started To Raise $2,500,000.

KINGSTON, Jan. 6.—(Canadian Press.)—The Board of Trustees of Queen's University at a meeting Monday decided to launch an extensive and endowment campaign for two million and a half. Part of the money to be raised will be used to build and equip a student union. The Alma Mater Society and its War Memorial committee will co-operate in the campaign. The general campaign headquarters will be at the university with district headquarters in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton and various other points in Canada and the United States.

Mr. S. Stalford, Jr. Montreal, will act as executive secretary. The campaign will terminate the latter part of November with a grand reunion of all former students, and graduates in this city.

RECENTLY AUTHORIZED PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS AND ORPHANS PAID FOR FIRST TIME TO THOUSANDS

First Payments Under New Scheme Totalled 128,000 Pounds.

420,000 PENSIONED.

Plan Calls For Small Payment Weekly From Workers.

LONDON, Jan. 6 — (Canadian Press). — One of the outstanding social reforms brought about by the Baldwin Government, the extension of old age pensions to include also pensions for widows and orphans, came into operation yesterday when the first pensions became payable under the new law.

This reform is a part of the programme for national insurance against unemployment, sickness, old age and death, which programme applies to all workers of both sexes earning less than 250 pounds ($1,270) a year—approximately 15,000,000 workers.

It is estimated that it affects 70 per cent. of the entire population of the United Kingdom. Under this scheme the workers are assessed a weekly contribution of ninepence (18 cents) for men and fourpence halfpenny (9 cents) for women, yielded about equally between employer and employee. This amount is added to a similar amount already payable under the previously existing health insurance scheme.

About 128,000 pounds (about 640,000 were disbursed yesterday as the first instalment of the benefits to widows and orphans included in the bill. The claimants were about 140,000 widows with 270,000 children and 10,000 orphans.

Irving Berlin and Bride Seek Blessing Of Father

ATLANTIC CITY, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press)—The blessing of Clarence H. MacKay on the union consummated in New York yesterday will be sought by Irving Berlin, a jazz song author, and his heiress bride, the former Miss Ellin MacKay, a daughter of MacKay.

"We are very anxious that the father should give us his consent and his blessing," said the bride. The author of a score of joyous melodies nodded his acquiescence in his desire.

"Bother" and "Blow" Are Toughest Expletives Used By Women Hockey Players—They Say

LONDON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press)—Alleged damns from the lips of damsels have shocked the conductors of a sporting paper, The Hockey Field, into grave protest against the use of bad language by women hockey players.

"The practice of using bad language must be checked at once," says the paper, which is the organ of the all-England women's hockey association. The editress asserts that in a recent match one of the captains was charged with "swearing several times" during the game.

Some of the leading hockey women and secretaries of their clubs declare that "bother" and "blow," are the strongest terms they have heard from a player who has received a whack on the shins.

Ten Years' and Six Years' Service Respectively Complimented By Chairman.

MANY CHANGES. . .

Both Retiring Members Tell of Advancement in Educational Systems.

After a service of ten years on the Board of Education, Dr. F. C. Neal relinquished officially his tenure of office at the regular meeting held last night.

The departure of Dr. Neal and Mrs. W. R. Morris drew from the chairman, J. A. McKone, a note of regret at their passing from the field.

Mrs. Morris said she was sorry to leave the Board, but that in her six-year term she had seen many changes, which she thought were to the advantage of educational interests. She said that the matter on which she had concentrated did not require her attention further, as the plans for the new school were prepared and ready for use. She paid a tribute to E. Roland Wilson who, she was sure, would be of great assistance in furthering the aims of the Board. "A superintendent of the actual construction should be a member of the Board, and as she would not have been suitable, she thought that the new member would be of value in that regard. Mrs. Morris concluded by reading a letter from Dr. Merchant, which concerned the extension of secondary education.

Dr. Neal, in reply to the tribute paid by Mr. McKone, said that he too had lived to witness many changes, that he had seen many of the basic rules and regulations supplanted by others which were for the benefit of education.

The business of the evening was despatched in the usual characteristic manner, and included the hearing of the annual report and the report of receipts and expenditures by Mrs. Morris, as well as attendance reports for the public schools and Collegiate Institute..

On motion by E. B. Fowler and Dr. Neal, L. D. W. Magie was reappointed to the Public Library Board for a term of three years, from February 1, 1926.

The following is a report of school attendance:

Germans Wakened By Shock When Quake Shakes Cologne

LONDON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—An earthquake shock caused many people living along the Rhine to awaken from sleep early to-day and rush out of their houses to the open spaces, says an Exchange Telegraph despatch from Cologne.

The shock was felt generally throughout Western Germany, and even in Hamburg. No damage was reported.

Ballot Box May Contain a Deputy's Spectacles; Cannot Be Opened Or Even Shaken For Six Weeks

Being an assistant in the business of electing candidates for municipal honors isn't always a sinecure. Besides the wear and tear on the nerves and temper of the long day of excitement, there are other hazards, as one man who helped in the recent municipal contest has found out. For his labor on that occasion as deputy returning officer, he will receive six or seven dollars which would be velvet if he hadn't contrived to lose a twelve dollar pair of spectacles in the rush of the day. The only possible place that these "specs" may yet be found is in the ballot box, and that can't be opened for six weeks. So, in the meantime, if he wishes to have his eyes functioning properly, he will have to replace the glasses and spend his stipend and almost as much more, on their purchase. If they are in the ballot box, he will have two pairs of glasses, it is true, but only one pair is required, so he's distinctly out of luck in any case.

City Clerk Armstrong would not allow the box to be shaken to ascertain whether the spectacles are really there. The box must not be tampered with, the rules say.

SAY OPERATORS ARE TO BLAME

Coal Miners Charge Deliberate Witholding of Information in Conference.

FROM LEWIS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6th (United Press)—Coal operators were blamed by the miners today for alleged withholding from the public of information as to developments in the joint conference of miners and mine owners now being held here in an attempt to settle the anthracite coal strike the mine owners are deliberately withholding detailed information on the negotiations, a spokesman for President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers said.

Letter Carriers' Overseer Accused Of Stealing Mail

MOOSE JAW, Sask., Jan. 6. (Canadian Press).—Otto Wedman, 47, for the past eight years overseer of letter carriers at the local post office, was yesterday remanded by Magistrate H. S. Lemon, in City Police Court, to stand trial at the next sitting of Criminal Court on charges of stealing parcels from the mails. He was released on bail of $1,000 in two sureties.

Wedman has been employed at Moose Jaw Post Office for the past 15 years.

Packages of mail, alleged to have been taken from the after-Christmas rush of registered mail, were found in his possession at the time of his arrest on December 29, police and postal officials testified at the preliminary hearing.

ANNUAL POULTRY SHOW OPENS WITH NINE HUNDRED ENTRIES

Judge Enthuses Over Fine Quality of Birds on Display.

BARRED ROCKS EXCEL.

Several Interesting Demonstrations Add to Attraction of Exhibition This Year.

The annual show of the Peterborough Poultry Association opened yesterday in the Armouries building, with a total of nearly nine hundred entries in the different classes. Peterborough always has a good show," said one of the judges last evening, Mr. George Robertson of the Dominion Experimental Farm at Ottawa, who, half way through inspection of the birds, was enthusing over some of the fine White Leghorns on view. The other judge is Mr. G. J. Lawrie of Maple.

Peterborough has reason to be proud of its Poultry Show, inasmuch as so many of the Poultry Associations of the district have gone out of business in late years, while the local exhibition still continues to flourish and expand. An item mention by Mr. George Paxman, the genial treasurer and superintendent of the association, to whose enterprise and unfailing interest much of the success of the local show is due, is the increasing interest being taken by young men of the rural districts in this neighborhood, as proved by many more entries from these parts in this year's exhibition.

From out of town, the main exhibitors are W. H. Bowhey of Agincourt ,showing Bantams and Rhode Island Reds; Norman Murray of Galt, Blue Andalusians; F. G. Bouskill of Port Hope, Anconas; A. J. Ward of Stouffville, Buff Rocks and Jersey Giants; Stinson and Whitefield of Cobourg, Barred Rocks and Brown Leghorns; W. J. Abernethy of Campbellford, White Orpingtons and Columbian Wyandottes; Dr. Hayden of Cobourg, Buff Orpingtons; Little and Jones of Bowmanville, White Leghorns; Lorne Hutchinson of Warkworth, water fowl and turkeys; W. Leaped To Rescue Man; Bystander Stole Specs

NEW YORK, N.Y., Jan. 6 (United Press) — Another "meanest thief" has appeared here. Father Joseph J. McGowan, Welfare Island chaplain, leaped into the East River and rescued a man from drowning. Before he jumped he handed his glasses, valued at $12, to a bystander.

When he reached shore, Father McGowan could find neither bystander nor glasses.

Blames Luxuries For Colds One Chief Cause Of Illness

CHICAGO, Jan. 6.—The luxuries of modern living with which civilized man has surrounded himself are in large part to blame for the sickness known as the "common cold," which causes more illness annually than any other malady, Dr. Isaac A. Abt said in a report of his investigation of colds made for the Gorgas Memorial Institute.

Vaccines for the treatment of colds were termed "of very doubtful value to say the least," and "not based on accurate scientific knowledge.

"It would be important to determine the causes which lead to the occurrence of this widespread affliction," said the report. "It is obvious that if the causes were definitely known the prevention and treatment would be simplified.

"The luxuries with which civilized man has surrounded himself are not unmixed blessings, and it is safe to say that these artificial protections have diminished the resistance of human beings against colds."

RADIO FOR DEAF CONSIDERED AS POSSIBLE HELP

ACTION POSTPONED.

Manitoba School For Deaf Seeking Conclusive Proof.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 6. (Canadian Press).—Installation of radio receiving apparatus in the Manitoba School for the Deaf is under consideration by the Provincial Government. Such action awaits only conclusive proof that such would be beneficial, according to Dr. R Fletcher, Deputy Minister of Education.

The authorities, while inclined to postpone action pending expert opinion of the curative influences of radio, have been aroused by two bona fide cases of deafness, which have resulted in the restoration of the auditory faculties through the use of radio.

Many children at the Provincial School for the Deaf have been listening-in, purely as an experiment, Thomas Rodwell, superintendent, declares. Concentration of sound, he said, would make it possible for those almost deaf to distinguish between sounds, but as nothing extraordinary had yet been obtained, he did not think it right to raise false hopes in those afflicted.

The principle of enabling deaf persons to hear by means of vibrations had been tested by the medical profession, according to local specialists. The results, however, had proved generally disappointing.

A new type of aeroplane which has just been tested has its wings so constructed that, if a breakdown occurs, they form a parachute.

SHORT FUSE CAUSE.

COBALT, Jan. 6. — (Canadian Press).—Trapped at the bottom of a shaft without a chance to escape, two men, one of them a bridegroom of eight days, were killed instantly by a premature explosion at Hector Silver Mine in Gillies limit, yesterday morning. The victims were Charles W. Pattie, a French-Canadian, and Frank Lunn, a Finn. Both were young men. They had taken a contract at shaft sinking, and were preparing to fire the holes they had drilled before coming off the shift. Investigation indicated that a short fuse was responsible.

N. S.—You are inclined to be supercilious and domineering; self-satisfied, and intolerant of interference, even when for your own good. If your better nature were allowed to prevail, you would be gentle and sympathetic. You have considerable mental power, but probably not so much as you think. Without priding yourself on your immunity, think how hard the lots of others are in comparison. Do not become morbid. Assert your power, prove your worth. You were born on a Tuesday. Your color is brown.

You should go far in a musical career, but must guard against drifting into regard for the lighter compositions that require little technique. Wider reading would increase your vocabulary and aid you in conversation; but choose your reading matter wisely. I will give you more specific facts if you send a stamped envelope. You were born on a Thursday. Your color is blue.

P. B.—You are ambitious and energetic and efficient, but have not yet developed the aggressiveness and assertiveness that will carry you to the heights to which your mentality entitles you. You were born on a Wednesday. Your color is red.

R. E. M.—You are logical and daring in your thoughts; you have excellent perception of first principles, and will excel in the world of science where analysis and classification are required. Guard against becoming self-centred; keep looking outward to your goal. Do not concentrate on "heavy" literature alone, but relax by reading one of the better novels occasionally.

FARM NEWS AND PROBLEMS

WEEDS. MAY BE ELIMINATED BY FALL WORKING

Annuals Will Germinate in Fall if Ground Kept Soft.

WINTER ANNUALS.

Some Plants Pass Through Cold Months as Seedlings.

Where do the weeds go in the winter time? Certainly not to that region whither they are consigned times without number by harassed and perspiring farmers. The answer to the question involves the classification of all weeds into three groups—annuals, biennials and perennials.

Annual Weeds.

Although annuals do not live over the winter they are much more in evidence in spring and summer than are weeds belonging to either of the other two groups. This is accounted for by the fact that the annuals reproduce before the advent of winter's frosts. The seeds for the coming crop of revenue reducers are enclosed in tiny coats which afford ample protection even during frosts such as Peterborough experienced in the last Sunday of the old year.

Methods of Killing Annuals.

In some cases, especially when winter is somewhat tardy in approaching, these seeds can be induced to germinate before winter. This may be done by providing a moist, friable seed-bed through after-harvest and fall cultivation. Having sprouted the young growths become the prey of the frost.

Then again, it is sometimes possible to encourage annuals to germinate early in spring, in which case preparation for spring-sown crops does the needful. Anything that tends to speed-up spring germination, such as fall plowing, drainage and ridging up over winter to dry the land early, and a trip with the harrow over bare land previous to seeding, has a beneficial effect in thinning the ranks of most varieties of annual weeds. Many are thus started and can be destroyed before any crop is in the way of their destruction.

Winter Annuals.

A different problem is presented by that class of annuals known as winter annuals which are thus named because of their ability to survive the winter as seedlings. In this class are such familiar weeds as shepherd's purse, chess, tumbling mustard and false flax. By reason of their early start they have a root system developed before other vegetation and in a very brief space of time are sufficiently vigorous to make their uprooting the reverse of a pastime. Very often they are in full bloom just as the crops are germinating. Shepherd's purse, indeed, may sometimes be seen an inch or two in height in the fields of Peterborough County before the snow falls, and in some districts has been known to go into the winter in bloom, remain fresh under the snow and proceed to mature seed on the return of mild weather.

The presence of these undesirable quests is invariably a reminder of the importance of giving special attention to the condition of the fields at wintering in and early spring. The harrow, in spring-time, becomes a good medium for their extermination, provided the ground be not too hard. Hard pulling, the surest method is also unfortunately, the slowest and most tedious.

Biennial Weeds.

Biennial weeds belong to that class of plants that grow, flower, seed, and die without a space of two years. In the first year the weed has a little stem, and is largely composed of leave packed in on the soil which serve to furnish food to carry the plant through the winter and to form a reserve supply to be stored in the thick root. In the second year the flower stem runs up to a good height, and the stored-up food is used in the development of flowers and seeds. Blueweed, evening primrose and the common thistle belong to this group. They may be destroyed as seedlings or the broad-shared cultivator may be used on them, or they may be pulled out by hand while the soil is still soft. Biennial weeds simply branch out again and go to seed a little later if mowed or cut above the crown only once.

Perennial Weeds.

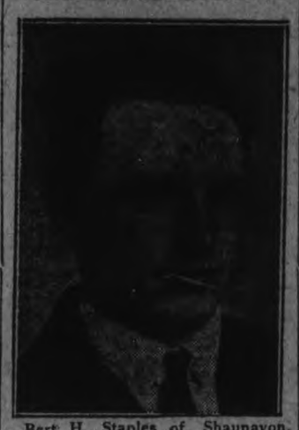
Perennial weeds are soft stemmed plants which, while reproducing themselves by seed are also carried on year by year by strong root systems. In winter, the parts of the plant which are above ground die off, but the roots survive.

To combat perennials, labor and patience are required in greater degree than in the cases of annuals or biennials. In spring the average perennial is full of vigour as if refreshed by a long winter's sleep. A plan often followed with good results is to let the weeds spend themselves in preparation for seed production and then by timely cutting of hay or grain prevent the completion of the work. Plowing before the weed has an opportunity to restock its depleted store of food must then be followed up by close starvation of the underground parts, by the use of the broad shared cultivator as often as they reach the light, or by dragging them from the soil out into the glare of the hot sun which dries and shrivels them. The work must be done thoroughly. A half-hearted attack on perennial root-stock is worse than useless as it may serve only to break them up and transplant them like distributing cuttings of a desirable plant. Couch grass, dock, Canada thistle and sow thistle are perennials.

It cannot be overemphasized that a regular, short rotation of crops, which provides a cleaning crop at intervals, such as smother crops of clover, and at all times the most thrifty and complete possession possible of the soil by crops is the best insurance agent against weeds.

The dollar you pay back looks twice as much as the one you borrowed.

SUCCESSFUL SETTLER.



Bert H. Staples of Shaunavon, Sask., a young man of twenty-four, who is spending Christmas in England, is a great booster for Canada, to which he came in 1919 without farming experience or money. He now owns a 320-acre farm, a good house, and barns worth $8,000 almost all paid for, as well as good farm machinery and stock. He is bringing back two friends with him in March.

JERSEY HEIFER MAKES RECORD

Old Record Was Exceeded By 17 Pounds of Butter Fat.

GOVERNMENT STOCK.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—Exceeding the former champion's record by 17 pounds of butter fat, the senior yearling Jersey heifer, "Farleigh St. Mawes Retts," owned and developed by the Dominion experimental station at Summerland, B.C., has just established a new world's record for her breed and age, it was announced by the Central Experimental Farm here. The record was made under the rules of the Canadian record of performance, and the scoring is based on fat production.

"Farleigh St. Mawes Reta," calved at the age of one year and 345 days. Her record is announced as 9,013 pounds of milk and 524 pounds of fat in 305 days, as compared with a record of 10,532 pounds of milk and 507 pounds of fat in the 305-day period by the former champion, "Golden Lad's Jozphine 2nd," owned by Sherman Nursery Co., Iowa.

The rules of the Canadian record of performance require that she freshen within 400 days of her previous date, which requirement she will easily fulfil, it is stated.

FACING COWS IN IS PREFERABLE

Animals Are More Conveniently Fed From the Centre Alley.

LOOK BETTER OUT.

When the advantages incident to either of the two prevailing systems of stabling cattle are totalled up—facing them in or out—it is evident why many farmers prefer to have the dairy herd face toward the centre of the barn. The animals are more conveniently fed—which is perhaps the biggest item of all. Animals on either side can be served with silage or other rations from a push cart operated in the central feeding alley. Hay, also, can be distributed with less litter and dust. Next in importance is the fact that where the cows face in there is usually better light for milking in the case of both rows of cows than where the milkers are obliged to work nearer the centre of the barn. In the case of the barns lighted by electricity this factor is not of much importance; still an abundance of natural light in the vicinity of the milk pail is always an advantage. In addition to these factors is the further one that a barn arranged in this fashion always looks cleaner than one where the central passage way is flanked on either side by manure gutters. Furthermore it can be built a couple of feet narrower and consequently at somewhat less expense. The central posts can be brought in line with the stanchion supports, where they are less noticeable and in no wise in the way.

The advantage of stabling dairy cows with their heads toward the outside of the barn are in some measure the reverse of certain of those stated where the other method is followed. Manure and litter is easier handled, perhaps, though the advantage here is less today than formerly. One argument, years ago, was that a wagon could be driven down the centre of the barn and cleanings of either side placed in it. The modern track carrier takes the place of this earlier method and this equipment can be made to serve either side of the barn quite as effectively as though installed only in the centre. In fact, the overhead track in many barns is so arranged that a single carrier is used for the removing of waste from either side. More direct contact with the fresh air supply is obtained; however, where the cows face out, and it is the belief of many that the animals themselves present a more attractive appearance when they are arranged in this fashion. Where milking machines are used it is not to be overlooked that the presence of the wide alley through the centre of the barn is helpful in the handling of this equipment.

All of these factors must be taken into consideration by anyone who is making plans for new dairy barn construction. Where the balance will be struck in any particular instance will depend, perhaps, partly upon a preference, partly upon the general type of the barn to be built and also partly upon size. More and more in years to come will efficiency in dairy work have a larger and larger place than in the past. Consequently, every prospective builder of a new dairy barn should study the problem from this angle and base his decision largely upon that arrangement of his herd in the stable which will be productive of having the greatest number of steps and facilitating in other ways the operations necessary in handling the work that centres at this point. It must not be forgotten that a few hundred steps a day is no great item by itself, but when the sum total of such steps for a series of months or years is computed the total is apt to be a matter of considerable importance.

GREAT BRITAIN TAKES MUCH OF CANADA'S GOODS

Takes One-Third of All Exports, Mainly in Farm Products.

WHEAT MAIN ITEM.

Cheese Comes Next and is Competing More With Foreign Makes.

Analyses of our foreign trade frequently appear to overlook the fact that the great bulk of our trade is still carried on with Great Britain and the United States. The fact that there is sometimes more of the spectacular in our trade with some of our new customers should not obscure the fact that, eliminating the United States, our exports to Great Britain are vastly greater than the aggregate of our sales to all other countries combined. Last fiscal year our sales to the United Kingdom totalled $395,850,982 while shipments to all countries aggregated $1,069,067,353 and to the United States $417,457,171. Our next largest customer, Germany, bought $24,234,685 worth of our goods.

During the year just past, as normal by,the largest item in British purchases from Canada was wheat. Last year's total was $189,127,000. Owing to a differential rate between the freight charges on wheat and flour passing through Canada for the United Kingdom, it proves more advantageous to the British importer to have the product shipped over in the raw matreial form and milled in the British flour mills. As a consequence, the total value of flour shipped by Canadian mills to the United Kingdom during the same period was $20,124,000.

The second largest item in British imports from Canada was cheese, of which the total value was $22,658,000. With the gradual improvement in the standards of our dairy products, it is more and more possible to compete successfully with the products of such countries as Denmark and New Zealand. Standards have been made compulsory over a large part of Canada with regard to the quality of the milk to be used for cheese production purposes, and the difference is already noticeable in our trade totals.

Big Market for Canadian Bacon.

The third largest item in our exports to the United Kingdom and one which suggests the possibility of large expansion, is bacon and ham products. Last year we sold $22,034,323 worth of these products to the United Kingdom in comparison with $17,876,255 the year before. The Canadian packing industry is beginning to see light in the British and European market after an adverse period of some years, and the superior quality of the Canadian bacon is now being recognized. The importance of sales of this product is seen from the fact that total exports of these products to all countries amounted to $22,392,223.

In addition to the products mentioned, Britain took large quantities of many other Canadian farm produce such as: oats, $10,072,000; barley, $16,637,000; butter, $5,593,333; cattle, $9,126,000; rye, $4,417,000. Canadian metals are also finding an important outlet in the Mother country. Lead to the extent of $6,186,000 was marketed as well as nickel valued at $3,510,000, silver bullion, $3,267,000, aluminum, $1,067,000, and copper worth $1,155,000. There is also a large market for our canned fish, condensed milk, pulp and paper, and many other classes of goods.

These figures representing the different Canadian products marketed in the United Kingdom show a gradual increase over the past few years, and there is every reason to believe that this will continue. The cattle embargo has been lifted, and the market for our cattle is thus enlarged. Then again, the return to par of British exchange has made it easier for the British buyer to take our goods. There are many indications, moreover, that the British people are coming through their period of industrial depression as well as could be expected, and if this is the case, the buying power of the country will enlarge continuously. With some of the other countries, especially in Europe, industrial improvement means greater competition and smaller profits for our manufacturers. To a degree this is the case also with the United Kingdom, but the increase in demand for our raw materials tends to more than compensate for this.

We are not only sellers to Britain; we are buyers on a large scale as well. Last year our imports totalled $151,100,207, a by no means small portion of Britain's total sales abroad. The largest items in our purchases from Britain were woven woollen fabrics worth $18,876,000 and distilled beverages worth $15,771,000.

Following are the trade figures with Great Britain during the past three years:

CONCRETE GOOD FOR BARN FLOOR

Should Be Used With Plenty of Bedding and Wooden Platform.

FINISH ROUGH.

Concrete is more commonly used for the floor of horse barns today than formerly. It has several distinctive advantages over wood and clay, but has the objection of being very hard, causing the feet of a horse to become tender when standing on it continuously. This objection, however, can be largely overcome by placing an abundance of bedding in the stalls or by making a removable platform of wood. A platform that is often used is made of 2 by 4 pieces, spaced ½-inch apart and placed longitudinally in the stall. When it becomes badly worn it can be replaced at a small expense. It is best to have the floor in the passageway made of coarser material or roughened to prevent slipping which may cause broken bones.

A packed clay floor is favored among many horsemen. It has the advantage of being soft and consequently easy on the horse's feet, but is insanitary and requires frequent repair. A wood floor of heavy plank is often put in barns, but it wears rapidly and there is always danger of a plank breaking and causing injury to the animal. The planks will become damp, too, causing them to warp and become difficult to clean.

In flooring a dairy barn, different points must be considered. Among the first requisite is that of cleanliness. The material should be of a non-absorbent nature and such that it can be easily and thoroughly cleaned. Here again, concrete is the most popular material. It seems to fill the requirements best, although there is some objection to it because of its coldness. This can be overcome to a large extent by heavy bedding. The concrete floor should be given a rough finish which can be accomplished best by using a wire brush or broom on the surface at the time of construction.

GOOD OUTLOOK FOR CATTLE

WINNIPEG.—The outlook for cattle business with Great Britain never was better. The old country has been depleted by the foot and mouth disease and needs Canada's cattle badly. With the prospect of larger cattle boats being placed on the Canadian Atlantic route and cheaper transportation rates for the western shipper, there is a brighter outlook than for some seasons.

PROSPERITY IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC. —With two excellent crops the farmers of the province of Quebec are now enjoying a prosperity equal to that of the best pre-war period, according to the provincial minister of agriculture. "I consider now that the condition of the farmers has improved to such an extent that they are in a better and more staple situation than they have been for years," he stated. He added that he believed the exodus was over for good and that conditions would be a powerful factor in keeping those on the farm attached to the soil.

Crop Reports

The following extracts are from reports made by the Agricultural Representative to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Brant.—There is a little more activity in grain market than for some time. Seeds are moving a little more freely. Farmers appear to be buying considerable quantities of alfalfa, both from dealers and their neighbors. A small quantity of hay is moving with prices up to $20.00, depending on quality and buyer.

Elgin.—Eggs are more plentiful this week, many of the pullets are laying on the farms. Poultry generally is getting more care throughout the county. Eggs are selling at 60c per dozen.

Very little grain moving, a few farmers who are financially able are holding wheat; beans have gone out quite fast, most of the white pea type realizing $2.00 per bushel for growers.

Some corn is being hauled from fields which were too soft from excessive rain to permit of earlier harvesting.

Carleton.—There is an abundance of feed on hand and livestock is looking and doing well. Reports would indicate that more livestock and noticeably steers are being fed this winter than in previous years.

A number of our cheese factories have been holding their annual meetings and reports are coming in that a very successful year has just closed. One of your factories has made a record which will stand some beating. 99.99 per cent. of the cheese made at this factory graded No. 1, there being only six cheese below this grade and these all from the one vat on a Monday morning, a result of bad milk.

Dundas.—Dairymen are scouring the country asking for fresh milk cows, in order to keep up their flow of milk. The price is apparently no obstacle, especially for T.B. tested cows. Ordinary tested grades are bringing around $125.

Essex.—Weather is fine for the farmers here. It is dry without snow. Farmers are getting their work caught up very rapidly.

Haldimand.—Alsike was an excellent crop in Haldimand this year. One farmer reported a yield of 70 bushels from 15 acres, which he sold for $750, which means an income of $50 per acre. The alfalfa factory is working night and day and considerable hay is being shipped from the county.

Halton.—Due to the scarcity of coal, wood is selling from $10 to $14 per load, a load consisting of three cords, shortwood one foot long.

Kenora.—Every farmer that can get away is in the bush getting out pulpwood. Pulp-wood is worth $5.50 per cord.

Kent.—There is the usual number or more steers being fed this year in all districts with the exception of two townships where the corn fodder was ruined by the corn borer. Farmers are still drawing their sugar beets to the factory and there are hundreds of tons to come in yet. There are also many acres of beets frozen in the ground. It is a question whether or not these will be lifted. If the weather becomes milder they may be harvested.

Leeds.—Timothy hay is being baled and shipped to the West at $14-$15 per ton and at the same time some dairymen in the county are trying to purchase alfalfa hay from western points.

There is a good demand for good dry hard maple for stove and furnace as coal is impossible to get by rail and coke is almost impossible to get, even at a price equal to that of coal, $16.00. Farmers should be able to sell quantities of wood this winter, although there has not been enough sleighing to get much new wood out as yet.

Lennox and Addington.—Many flocks of chickens throughout the county are infested with worms. Loss from this cause has been enormous. Flocks that are well fed, properly housed, and should be laying, have gone light in weight. In many cases, birds that were put in crates to be fattened, failed to put on flesh. Wherever an examination has been made, worms have been found in the ceca. In many cases, these worms were so numerous that they were twining around each other. Usually they are threadlike and about one quarter of an inch long. A tablespoonful of concentrated lye, boiled slowly for two hours in a gallon of grain, which was fed to the birds proved effective in eradicating the worms.

Middlesex.—There appears to be more steers being fed this winter than for many years past. Many of these were brought from the West.

Victoria.—Rather heavy falls of snow and high winds have filled up the roads in places, but in other places it has all blown off so that there is neither wheeling nor sleighing. If this snow stays it is a week earlier than last year and two weeks earlier than the year before.

DISEASED HOOF ON IDLE HORSE

It Is Cruelty To Keep Horse Standing Without Exercise.

SOME TREATMENTS.

No horse should stand for a single day without working or taking active outdoor exercise. It is cruel to keep a horse standing idle in the stable for months at a time and dangerous to allow such idleness for even one day. Azoturia and lymphangitis result from letting ahorse stand idle for one day or more, feeding him his usual ration of grain at such a time and then, in the case of azoturia, having him suddenly work or take outdoor exercise. Lymphangitis, commonly called "Monday morning disease," comes on in the stable when the horse is idle and heavily fed. Azoturia occurs when the horse that has stood idle is again worked or exercised,

Thrush often affects the hoofs and is caused by letting the horse stand in wet and filth in the stable. A mare is usually worst affected in the hind feet and a gelding in the forefeet. The hoofs have also grown out of shape. To prevent that it is also necessary to have the feet trimmed with a rasp at intervals of not more than one month and, if the horse is shod, to have the shoes reset once a month.

Treatment consists in having the hoofs rasped and otherwise trimmed by the blacksmith into as nearly normal shape as possible. If they are very badly overgrown, however, it sometimes is advisable not to do all of the necessary trimming at once, but to trim lightly and then repeat the process more fully as soon as the horse becomes accustomed to using his feet in their changed condition. Also have the smith cut away every bit of rotten, loose or under-run horn of the frog or sole and perfectly cleanse the cleft of the frog. Then pack into the cleft of the frog and nearby cracks all the calomel they will keep in place by forcing in a pledget of oakum on which a little pine tar has been spread. If the cracks and cleft are deep and large pure calomel may prove too expensive for liberal use. In that event use daily a mixture of equal quantities of calomel, subnitrate of bismuth and powdered boric acid.

Another good treatment in obstinate cases, is to mix one part of formalin with 20 parts of water, saturate cotton batting with that solution and tie it on the sole of the hoof; also working it into the cracks. That works well when the sole is soft and affected with canker. Repeat the dressing for three days and then apply pine tar containing a little turpentine, and cover with a leather pad.

New Potatoes in December Provided Christmas Dinner

Edward Feeley, of North Monaghan missed a few potatoes when he took up his crop in the fall. Later on he noticed some sprouts in the field and covered them up to protect them from frost.

His holiday dinner was improved by some fine new potatoes which he dug up in his garden on Dec. 24. The potatoes were about the size of a hen's egg.

MILK IS STRONG BEFORE CALVING

It is Customary to Dry Off Secretion For Several Weeks.

STRINGY MILK.

It is quite common for the milk to become strong in taste when a cow is nearing the calving time. For that reason and to give the cow a needed rest it is customary and advisable to dry off the secretion of milk for at least six weeks before calving. To accomplish that, when a cow is a persistent milker, start the drying off process eight weeks before calving.

If the milk becomes strong and unpleasant in taste before the time has arrived at which the drying off process should start the cow should be given a pound dose of Epsom or Glauber salt, dissolved in three pints of warm water, well sweetened with blackstrap molasses. Give it very slowly and carefully from a long-necked bottle so that none of it gets into the windpipe and lungs, else fatal mechanical pneumonia may result.

After the physic has acted mix in each feed, until the milk becomes normal, a tablespoon of a mixture of two parts of powdered wood charcoal and one part of granular hyposulphite of soda. If the milk does not soon become normal it is best to dry off the secretion of milk and it may then become normal at calving time.

It may be added that one should also be careful not to give the cow any strong tasting or smelling feed before milking as that may also taint the milk. It is likewise well to remove the milk from the stable as soon as it is drawn as warm milk, through its butterfat content, readily absorbs strong odors.

When the milk is stringy as well as unpleasant in taste, bacteria or germs may be considered the cause. If the milk is stringy at the time it is drawn from the udder the germs have invaded the udder and caused mastitis, commonly called garget.

When first noticed to be stringy set a sample of milk from each quarter of the udder in separate bottles which have been sterilized by boiling and labelled so that the source of the content of each may be known. In that way one can determine which quarter of the udder is yielding the stringy milk and the milk from that quarter may then be discarded.

When garget is the cause and is chronic it is incurable and there is no certainty that the milk from the apparently sound quarters is normal and fit and safe for human use.

When milk is normal at the time it is drawn from the udder and becomes stringy or ropy in standing, bacteria in the milk utensils, not in the udder, are the cause. The remedy for that is more scrupulously to cleanse and sundry the milk vessels, after using a good washing powder in the process. Steam or boiling water should be used for the sterilizing, and it is also necessary to cleanse all water tanks, troughs, etc., using chlorinated lime in the washing water used for that purpose. When garget occurs hypodermic treatment with mastitis bacteria may help. Consult your veterinarian about that.

Bighorn Sheep

Four things Solomon found "exceeding majestic," and one of the four was "an he goat on a rock." Solomon was a town-bred prince, but his father David was a country poet from the hills, and he must have had his son out among the mountains more than once in the days when the Kingdom of Israel was young.

But could either Solomon or David have seen an American bighorn sheep upon a cliff of the Rocky Mountains, the Old Testament would have had a naturalist's poem indeed written into it. Beauty as well as majesty, has the mountain sheep, and the great, massive curled horns of the ram are a kingly crown for a royal animal. With the threefold defense of speed, agility on the dizziest heights, and terrible strength if brought to bay, this king of the high places makes all the western rocks his castles.

Fortunate tourists, who have the hardihood to leave their automobiles and climb great heights sometimes catch a glimpse of the bighorn, though only at long rifle range, for the animal is very wary and aloof during the summer.

But when winter begins (and the snows are already falling on the high mountains in the West) the mountain sheep begin to descend to the valley pastures. Here they abandon some of their wildness, and if they live in a national park and have not learned that man is an animal that kills as far as he can see, they are quite approachable and even easy to photograph.

FOREIGN MARKET MEANS LESS TO CANADIAN FARM

Important Percentage of Canada's Crops Is Used Here.

HALF OF WHEAT.

Use of Grain Up From 38 to 44 Per Cent. During Past Year.

The Canadian farmer is getting a step closer each year to independence of the foreign markets. There is a general belief that nearly all our farm products go to the United Kingdom or to Europe, and that we retain only a negligible proportion for our own use. There is a degree of truth in this, or rather, has been in the past. But that proportion retained is no longer negligible—in fact, is becoming a very important percentage of the total. This is readily seen from the following analysis of the proportions of farm products consumed at home, and shipped abroad, respectively:

	Consumed In Canada		Exported From Canada

Home Markets Take Basic Products.

As will be seen, a larger percentage of our basic products is being sold in the home market. This is particularly noticeable in the case of wheat, hay, condensed milk, mutton, etc. There have also been notable declines, but most of these occur where there has been a falling off in output during the past year, or where demand has been particularly keen in the foreign markets. There is still a large proportion of many of our basic products sold abroad, and this will continue to be the case, but the increase which has already taken place in home consumption is highly significent.

The negligibly small proportion of these farm products imported into Canada, in competition with the home products, is shown below:

	Products in Canada 1924 (Calendar)	Imported 2924 (fiscal)
Wheat, bus	262,097,000	47,175

Mutton, lbs	31,454,139	1,561,528
Eggs, doz	212,648,685	6,512,812

From the table just shown it is evident that the Canadian farmer has little to fear from foreign competition. In only one case, that of wool, does the import figures exceed that of the home product. In only a few cases is the import figure anywhere near the home product figure. In short, the Canadian farmer is getting a better and better grip on the home market, and is less and less dependent on markets abroad.

GRADE SYSTEM HELPS BUYERS

Has Proved Its Soundness By High Regard For Product.

INTERESTS IDENTICAL.

Judging from the high regard in which Canadian seed control work and standards are held in other countries our system of conducting the commerce of seeds on a basis of legal grades has proved its soundness. The fundamental principle of the system is that the quality of seed sold must conform to definitions prescribed by law. In his report for 1925 the Dominion Seed Commissioner points out that our grades are based primarily on the general quality and purity of the seed determined by its freedom from noxious and useless weed seeds, and its percentage of pure living seeds. The general appearance of the seed as influenced by weather or seasonal conditions, cleaning, maturity and disease is also taken into consideration. Cereals, grasses, sweet clover, field corn and all other forage and fodder crop seeds have been brought under this compulsory grading system, and all grading done by the qualified official inspectors of the Seed Branch.

INCREASING CANADA'S WEALTH.

Canada has many wonderful opportunities for increasing her national wealth, but probably none so easily possible as is that of wheat growing, says the Natural Resources Intelligence Service of the Department of Interior.

With an increase of but one bushel per acre on the area planted to wheat last year many millions of dollars of additional revenue would be secured by the growers.

Last season nearly 22 million acres of wheat were grown.

One extra bushel per acre at the present price of around $1.50 would mean $33,000,000 more to Canada.

The Canadian Experimental Farms are doing truly wonderful work in the development of varieties of wheat that will be helpful to our Western wheat-growing Provinces.

More rapidly maturing varieties are enabling wheat to be grown farther north, while greater producing varieties will increase the output.

These all add to the attractiveness of Canada as a home for the settler who is willing to make the effort necessary to secure a competence from the still vacant fertile acres.

DESERVES SUPPORT.

The coming to Peterboro on Tuesday, January 19th, of Dr. J. R. P. Sclater of old St. Andrew's Church, Toronto, not only gives an opportunity of hearing one of the most noted lecturers in Canada, but also provides a chance to financially assist the Peterboro Horticultural Society, under whose auspices the lecture is to be given.

Dr. Sclater has not yet announced his subject, but those who heard him on his last appearance in Peterboro need no assurance of the eloquence with which the speaker can discourse, and they are looking forward with keen anticipation to his visit.

The proceeds will be devoted to the work of the Horticultural Society, and general support should, therefore, be forth coming, as the Society is essentially a community organization, contributing splendid service along the lines of beautifying Peterboro.

The influence of the Horticultural Society can be seen in the beautification of a number of formerly neglected corners, and in the very evident spirit of friendly competition among citizens as to which can produce the most attractive lawn or garden.

The competitions fostered by the organization not only benefit those who actually enter the contests, but also many other citizens who, while not competing, catch the spirit of the thing and improve their premises from year to year.

Both Dr. Sclater and the Horticultural Society merit a very liberal patronage.

THE SCOUT WORK.

The Boy Scout Association of Peterboro is appealing for greater interest in Scout work in this city, and particularly for the services of men who will take an active part in the movement as leaders.

Given Scoutmasters of the proper calibre, there would be no difficulty in securing enough boys to fill many troops here, but the difficulty in the past has been to secure enough good leaders.

Despite the imagined fear in the minds of some people that militarism is fostered by the Scout programme—a ridiculous idea when the matter is investigated—there is no doubt that Boy Scout work offers a splendid outlet for the gang spirit that is to be found among boys, and that if it is not diverted into safe channels is liable to develop along dangerous lines.

Under proper leadership the Scouts learn much that is of great use to them, and nothing that is harmful.

They cannot fail to grow up into better Canadians and better citizens because of their training in the Scout programme.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the association will be successful in enlisting the services of men willing to accept the position of Scoutmasters and ready to avail themselves of the opportunities for training that are offered by the special training course now announced by the association to take place in the near future.

Those who do so are sure to find their reward in the pleasure of moulding young material into good citizens.

CALLS A SPADE A SPADE.

Some of these Progressive members of Parliament should be taken by the hand and led gently into a corner while the etiquette of the political game is explained to them by an expert from one of the old parties.

These Westerners should be told that in political circles a spade is never called a spade, but must be described as an implement used in digging, or some such general definition as that.

Politics is not played usually on a basis of utter frankness.

It might be better, of course, if such were the case—but it isn't—and if the Progressives are to play politics they'll have to play according to the rules, or get nowhere.

For instance, what does Mr. N. V. Campbell, member for Mackenzie, Sask., mean by broadcasting this shameless statement through the newspapers?

"The Progressive party will sell its support in the best interests of the West. What legislation it can secure in the interests of the West is the fundamental question that will decide its actions. Both of the parties look alike to the Progressives, and the two matters of paramount interest at the present time are the Hudson Bay Railway and a rural credit system."

Tut, tut, Mr. Campbell! Things are not done that way in the political game.

If the Progressive support is to be "sold"—and what a crude way to speak of a political alliance—it is a very bad breach of etiquette to talk about it in public.

The old parties would not discuss the matter at all if they could help it, and if they were forced to make a statement it would be so camouflaged that the public would not be able even to read between the lines and get at the truth.

Mr. Campbell blurts it all out in a few sentences.

Such candor may be magnificant, but its not politics.

IMMIGRATION PLANS.

After the first enthusiastic acclaim given in England to the new emigration proposals directed to bring a large proportion of farm workers into Canada from the Old Country, there is being manifested in certain quarters a fear that all the glittering may not be gold, says the Montreal Gazette. The Daily News, for example, asks what guarantee is to be given that permanent employment will be found for those "who may risk everything by leaving these shores to take up an entirely new life in a distant land." The men, if they are in earnest, will to a great extent carry their own guarantee in brawn and muscle and in a willingness to work. The fact that the Dominion Government will take a substantial proportion of farm workers without previous experience ought to relieve some of the anxiety being expressed in the criticisms; and for five years after his arrival the new settler will have the help and guidance of the Canadian Colonization Department. The Times sees evidence of courage and broad vision in the new arrangement. At the same time it points out that the success of the experiment will largely depend upon many conditions in Britain as well as in Canada. This is obvious. What may be said of the scheme is that it is a constructive effort in a right direction to get the right kind of people into the Dominion. There are many prospective settlers anxious and willing to try their luck overseas, but they have been deterred in the past by the initial cost of travel. This difficulty will now be removed to an appreciable extent and there is reason for hoping that a goodly number of this class will take advantage of the opportunity to be afforded them. "At the moment," observes the Times, "there is a tendency to dwell rather too much on what Governments are prepared to do, to moralize too long on what is possible for the new settler to achieve. The best way of giving the settler the information that he wants is not by speculating on what might be done in the future, but by placing on record the hard facts about the men and women who have gone before." If the Dominion Government is to be congratulated upon the present agreement, the Times insists that the shipping companies "deserve a share of the praise for their patriotic co-operation in the experiment."

BOOM PETERING OUT.

Those who are tempted to sell out and seek their fortunes in Florida should consider the reports published in the press to the effect that the boom in Miami real estate is practically over, says the Hamilton Spectator. Booms are not always good things; in fact, are seldom desirable, and it is perhaps no serious detriment to the solid attractions of Florida that the hectic land speculations, which have sent up prices beyond all reason, should be nearing their end. But after a period of unnatural inflation comes the inevitable reaction, and this thought should give pause to enthusiastic emigrants. The extent of the boom is seen in the offer to the United States War Department of $2,836,560 for the Chapman Field military reservation, situated near Miami, a piece of land covering about 800 acres. It is said that this property, together with an additional fifty acres, which have been transferred to the Department of Agriculture since the time of purchase, cost the Government only $71,000. The present offer is more than 42 times as much as the original price paid for the 800 acres. Whether the promoters of this particular deal will be prepared to go through with it is not certain. There is no doubt, however, that enormous profits have been made in transactions of the kind, but, for the most part, they have been made by people with plenty of money to invest, who were prepared to take big risks. For there are always some who are caught with large tracts of land which they are unable to dispose of after conditions have again settled down to normal —which they always do sooner or later.

It is impossible to say what particular locality will be the next to enjoy a boom of this nature, but there are always enterprising promoters at work trying to stir up excitement somewhere or other. It is curious to reflect how the bare possibility of "cleaning up" will transform the natures of even the most conservative people. It is the old fable of dropping the substance to grasp the shadow over again. Hamilton folk, especially those who are comfortably established, should hesitate long before they follow the crowds into the unknown, however alluring the prospects may be. It will be very surprising if there are not quite a number of sadder but wiser men and women who will return home disillusioned and poorer in pocket from their wild goose chase.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Tomorrow the Battle of Ottawa will commence. The armies are already in position, and the zero hour is drawing near.

Municipal elections in Ontario were finally completed on Monday. The process started in many municipalities early in December, others voted on New Year's Day, and the remainder went to the polls Monday. And no matter what date was chosen few cities and towns reported a really high percentage of voters.

A THOUGHT.

MISUNDERSTANDING AND MISTAKES

Misunderstanding has caused more trouble than the Eighteenth Amendment. It has severed more friendships and marriages than a grumpy, chiselfaced Mother-in-law. It is one of the unhappy evils of a sensitive nature.

We cannot avoid a misunderstanding at times, but we can be slow to respond, and be thorough in our investigation before denouncing a friend for a seemingly atrocious or unfriendly act.

Employees misunderstand employers. This causes everything from the dynamiting of a plant to a complete walkout. Employers misunderstand employees. This causes everything from a cut in wages to discharge.

Men of quick action accomplish much in small time, but the law of average also arranges for them more mistakes. Quick action after misunderstanding without contemplation often results in regrettable breaks.

CHRISTMAS CONCERTS

BETHANY, Jan. 5.—The members of the United Sunday School enjoyed a treat on Wednesday, December 30, when in place of the usual Christmas tree and concert, a sleigh ride, supper and entertainment was held. About 3.30 five sleigh-loads of children left the church for an hour and a half of a drive. Upon their return they were taken to the Town Hall, where Rev. Mr. Poulter led them in games until 5.30. They were then brought over to the church for supper, which the teachers and parents had prepared during their absence. The basement was attractively decorated with streamers of red and green also with flags and Christmas bells. About one hundred and twenty-five sat down to supper. After the appetites were satisfied and while still at the table speeches and singing were indulged in. Mr. Poulter acting as chairman. Then seven children were presented with a Bible each, as they had never missed a Sunday during the year (sickness not being counted. These Bibles were given for presentation by a friend of children, who is greatly interested in Sunday School work. After a short speech by Mr. Monk, superintendent of the school. Mr. P. C. Brown was called to take his stand before the congregation, and Mr. Douglas Driver read a brief address, and Mr. Jackson presented on behalf of the congregation of the church, a library table, a gentleman's chair, and a fountain pen. Mr. Brown, although completely taken by surprise, made a suitable reply and someone started "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," everyone rising and singing heartily, after which three cheers were given for Mr. Brown and for Mr. Poulter.

After this, everyone present was asked to go upstairs to the auditorium of the church, and a short programme was given consisting of several choruses and a duet. Mr. Poulter then told Henry Van Dyke's story of "The Other Wise Man," while Mrs. Poulter worked the lantern and the different scenes of the story were pictured on the screen, a number of familiar hymns were shown on the screen also, which the children sang heartily. A bag of candy was also given to each small child present.

Mr. Clarence Rowan was a visitor to Peterboro on Wednesday.

Mr. John Staples of Lindsay spent Wednesday with his mother, Mrs. J. Staples.

Mr. Walter Price was a business visitor to Peterborough on Wednesday.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—A few export steers sold at $7.75 and $8; export heifers, $7.25 to $7.50, and export bulls, $8.50 a cwt. There are few stockers and feeders on the market, and 17 of the latter, 925 lbs. each, went at $6 a cwt. Five good baby beeves brought $10 a cwt. The buying all round today is enough to care for the supplies.

Although Buffalo calf prices have declined a dollar a cwt. tops are still bringing $16.50 a cwt., and purchases for that market are being made here. Prices were steady with yesterday. Good calves are 13 cents a pound. Sheep are steady to firm.

To-day's lamb quality is not good, but prices are as good as on Monday. The bulk of ewes and wethers sold at 14½ cents a pound. Sheep are steady to firm.

Monday's hog tickets were marked at $12.75 a cwt f.o.b., and packers are endeavoring to get another 25 cents a cwt. off today. No settlement was made this morning, and Monday's price looks as though it might stand.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press):—Selling out on the part of holders of wheat became heavy today and caused values to break. Increased pressure, both of Argentine and of Australian new crop grain, was reported. The wheat market closed unsettled, 2 1-8 to 4 cents net lower, new style, May $1.78 7-8 to $1.79, and July $1.54 1-4 to $1.54 3-8. Corn finished 1 1-8 to 1 5-8 cents down; oats 1-8 to 1-4 to 3-8c off, and provisions varying from two cents decline to an advance of 12 cents.

Handicaps to friends of higher prices for wheat developed early in the shape of downturns in quotations at Liverpool and Buenos Aires, with reports at hand telling of favorable harvest weather in Argentina. Bearish sentiment meanwhile received some additional impluse through the fact that the movement of Canadian wheat from the interior continues liberal and that on the other hand the stock of wheat at Liverpool has shown a gain of nearly a million bushels in the last two weeks.

STERLING RATES

Sterling demand $4.85 3-8.

Sterling cables $4.85 7-8.

EGG PRICES

OTTAWA, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—Fresh egg markets are holding steady under recent declines. Continued mild weather is aiding production in the East.

Toronto — Unchanged but weak, and dealers are shading prices to effect sales.

Montreal — The market kept a moderate tone with extras, jobbing 60 to 62, firsts 55, pullet extras 52. Storage extras continue fairly active.

Winnipeg—Dealers quoting country shippers delivered extras 45, firsts 30, seconds 25.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Jan. 5 (Canadian Press).—The feature of the domestic cash grain trade was the stronger feeling that developed in the market for O tario and Quebec oats, and prices were advanced 1-2 to 1 cent p.r bushel. Sales of car lots of No. 2 white were made at 53 cents, No. 3 white at 52 cents, and No. 4 white at 50 1-2 cents per bushel, ex-store. There was an improved demand for Canadian Western oats for export account and sales of several loads were made all-rail shipment from Fort William which is the first business of importance that has been transacted in this respect this season.

The latest developments in the potato trade was the announcement from New York that an embargo on all shipments of Canadian potatoes was placed on all lines to that city. The receipts here have been very light of late and few cars are on track, but supplies available from storage are ample to meet all requirements for the time being. The tone of the market has been strong and prices have advanced with car lots of New Brunswick Green Mountains quoted at $3.50 per bag, and Quebec varieties at $3 to $3.25 per bag of 90 lbs., ex-track.

The receipts of butter in Montreal were 94 packages, as against 100 for the same day last week, and 208 for the corresponding day a year ago. A feature of the trade was the demand that developed for Australian creamery butter, and it was reported that some purchases were made at 160s for shipment here. The supply of No. 1 pasteurized creamery on spot is claimed to be light and in consequence the tone of the market remains very firm with a moderate amount of business passing.

The receipts of cheese were 110 boxes, as compared with 461 for the same day last week, and 173 for the corresponding day a year ago. There was more enquiry from English importers for supplies and although prices bid were much lower they were accepted by some exporters, but the volume of business on the whole was small. Owing to the weaker cables an easy feeling prevailed on spot and prices for early makes were quoted at 20 1-2 to 21c per lb., and current receipts at 17 1-2 to 18c per lb.

MISS SHEA'S DEATH MOURNED IN OMEMEE

Fleetwood Girl Had Been Student at High School.

OMEMEE, January 6. — It is with keen regret that the peole of Omemee learned of the death of Miss Mabel Shea of Fleetwood, who passed away on Tuesday morning after a lingering illness, the outcome of a heavy attack of "flu" suffered almost a year ago. "Mabel," as she was better known to the young people of Omemee was an exceptionally bright young woman, and was immensely popular with the students of the Omemee High School which she attended for three years, prior to her Normal course in Peterboro. While engaged in her profession of teaching at Oshawa last year, she was taken ill, as a result of which she has been bed-fast since last February. All that loving care and the best that medical attention could do proved of no avail, and the patient sufferer passed away early on Tuesday morning. To the sorrowing loved ones left to mourn is extended the sympathy of a host of Omemee friends.

United Church Service.

The morning service at the United church on Sunday was marked with interest. The Young Worshippers' League were in attendance, and as the roll was called by the pastor, many of the members responded to their name by reciting the Ten Commandments, the 23rd Psalm and other passages of Scripture, according to age: Following this the pastor gave a very appropriate talk to the children, taking them on a journey supposedly 363 miles, which would continue until the end of the year. The necessities for this journey were considered and discussed and when summed up at the enclusion of the discourse were strong shoes, "Faith," clothing, "Hope," staff, "Love," and the stopping place for refreshment and rest would be the Sunday school or church each Sunday.

Not only the children but to the older folk as well, could a lesson be derived from this short talk.

Preparations are being made for the annual commencement under the auspices of the Omemee High School on Jan. 29. This event has always proved a treat and this year promises to be one better.

VERY BAD FIRE THREATENS VILLAGE

Prompt Work of Firemen and Villagers Saves Seeley's Bay.

KINGSTON, Jan. 6.—(Special).—But for the prompt work of the volunteer firemen and the villagers Seeley's Bay would have been wiped out by fire Sunday. The fire started in the garage of William Moulton, when an auto which was being tried out back fired. A sheet of flame shot across the garage and ignited a quantity of gasoline and oil which exploded. The building was gutted and the firemen and others workers had a difficult task in keeping the houses nearby free from the flames. Some of the buildings were badly scorched and for a time it looked as if the results would be very serious.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

USE YOUR FRANCHISE

Peterboro, January 5, 1926

Before each municipal election our City Fathrs are always complaining about such a small percentage of voters coming to the polls to vote. Well, if all the other polling booths were like the one at the Sacred Heart School you cannot blame the people for not coming out, especially if they had any other appointment to keep during the same day. I, along with a few others, went to this polling booth about three o'clock. There were four others before us waiting for their ballots, and from two to three times that number that had already voted standing in line waiting for the returning officer to take their ballots to put in the ballot box. Well from that on different strange things happened to make one wonder if it was really a secret ballot we were using.

Now it took me fifty minutes to go one half block and vote and walk home again. So how much of a good holiday would be spoiled if a person had to walk nine blocks. Is this encouraging people to go out and vote.

I don't think so.

Don't Neglect The Children's Coughs and Colds

Mrs. Wm. W. Card, Bancroft, Ont., writes:—"Last winter my three children had very bad colds, and they would cough all night long, which was very annoying to the rest of the family.

I could get nothing to help them until one night, a friend who was staying with me, advised me to give them

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

I immediately got some, and after I had used four bottles of it my children became quite well again, thanks to Dr. Wood's."

This preparation has been on the market for the past 37 years; you don't experiment when you buy it; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

REVENUE OF $30,000 A YEAR FROM CAMPBELLFORD POWER PLANT IS SPLENDID ASSET FOR TAXPAYERS

Ratepayers' Only Problem Appears To Be Disposal of the Earnings.

TWO CONTENTIONS.

Power Commission Adheres To Policy of Providing Reserve.

(By Alex. McGregor.)

CAMPBELLFORD, January 6. — The Jeremiahs, the prophets who predict that in a few years the people of Campbellford will be unable to pay their taxes, have been likened to a man with an investment that yields him a clear income of $30,000 a year, which he allows to accumulate in the bank, wrings his hands, and moans that he has no bread to give his children and no fuel to keep them warm. Such a man would not be taken seriously when he pleaded poverty and he would receive very little sympathy from his neighbors who knew the circumstances.

Campbellford has a municipal plant that furnishes the citizens with the cheapest light and power in America, and which earns the town a surplus of over $30,000 a year, or nearly half the amount raised by the tax levy. With a gold mine like that constantly yielding dividends Campbellford cannot be classed with those towns that are in financial straits and if there is a municipality in Ontario so favorably situated no report of its prosperity has ever reached here.

What to do with Surplus.

There is no gainsaying the above statements as to Campbellford's most valuable asset but there is a standing dispute as to how this yearly surplus should be used. The Water and Light Commissioners whose careful management has created the surplus, naturally desire to keep the title to the most of it in their own name as a sinking or contingency funds. Others believe that it should be turned over to the town treasurer and applied to a reduction of the tax rate. Last year the commission made a grant of $6000 to the town, and, besides has loaned the council the sum of $27,000, the rate of interest charged being three per cent. This loan, if turned over to the town without any strings attached, would reduce the tax rate by 20 mills on the present assessed value of the municipality. Under this form it appears on the town's books as a liability instead of what it really is, an asset.

What the Statute Says.

There are a number of influential taxpayers in Campbellford who believe that the surplus should be turned over to the town, and this claim was advanced by Dr. G. A. Hay (a former mayor) at the recent nomination meeting. Dr. Hay says that the Public Utilities Act supports his contention, section 43 of that enactment reading as follows:

"The revenue, after deducting disbursements, shall quarterly, or oftener, if the council so directs, be paid over to the treasurer of the municipality, and shall be placed to the credit of the public utility work if not required for the purposes of that work, and shall form part of the general funds of the corporation."

Dr. Hay gives it as his opinion that even if the statute did give the commission the right to maintain a sinking fund, the amount so reserved could not legally exceed $15,000, or 10 per cent. of the value of the building.

A Grant in 1926.

Chairman Abernethy of the Commission has publicly stated that that body will be able to make the town a grant of ten or twelve thousand dollars this year out of its surplus earnings. There are members of the new council who declare that in order to keep the tax rate down to a reasonable figure they will insist on a grant from the commission of at least $20,000. That is the situation as it stands to-day.

The Other Side.

The other side of this problem is dealt with by C. W. Keith, who served 16 years on the commission and who probably understands the situation as well as any man in Campbellford. Mr. Smith says that it is absolutely in the interests of the public for the commission to maintain a contingency fund. If all the surplus earnings were turned over to the town there would be no money to pay for repairs in the even of a breakdown and before the required amount could be raised it would be necessary to submit a bylaw to the taxpayers to authorize the expenditure. This would mean delay and in the meantime the town would be without light or power unless the municipal system were switched on to the Hydro at a big increase in rates.

System that Failed.

The first commission that was appointed to manage the municipal plant consisted of five members. In response to public clamor, the system was changed, the commission was abolished and the management of the commission was placed in the hands of the council. This arrangement remained in force for five years, when the old order of things was restored, the new commission consisting of the mayor and two elected members.

When the Hydro auditor on a demand made by the taxpayers, overhauled the books of the commission, Mr. Smith says that everything was found correct, and that the auditor in his report recommended that the commission keeps a surplus on hand, a recommendation that has been adopted.

There may be arguments over ways and means and as to how the surplus should be disposed of but there is no getting away from the fact that in its power plant Campbellford has an investment that is earning a handsome income every year.

GUELPH TAKES OVER RAILWAY

Plebiscite Demands Street Railway Management From the Hydro.

COSTS INCREASE.

GUELPH, Ont., Jan. 6.—By a vote of 2,597 to 1,834 the people of this city Monday voted in favor of the return of the electric railways in this city from the control of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission to the City Council. The Provincial Commission offered no opposition to the proposition, which was submitted to the electorate in the form of a plebiscite. The matter will now be taken before a committee of the Ontario Legislature.

The Guelph Radial Railway was transferred to the management of the Provincial Commission at the request of the city on May 1, 1921. It had previously been run at a loss. The commission rehabilitated the system and, according to the commission's report of 1922, such rehabilitation was responsible for the deficits that have ensued since the road was taken over.

The results of rehabilitation were as follows: Year ending October 31, 1922, "net deficit for year payable by the city of Guelph," $22,911.51. Year ending October 31, 1923, $12,982.12 net deficit. Year ending October 31, 1924, $20,932.64 net deficit.

No Sinking Fund.

All of the above deficits are exclusive of any allwances for depreciation or sinking fund. In this connection it is of interest, to read the Hydro's views on this matter as expressed in its report: "It is quite true that depreciation and sinking fund must sooner or later be provided for but it is unreasonable to expect a street railway system operating in a small city to earn sufficient during a rehabilitation period to take care of such additional charges, as well as the operating and capital expenses. There are few electric railways that make provision out of revenue for retiring the total capital investment and, therefore, from all sides it would appear equitable to defer depreciation during the rehabilitation period and sinking fund for a period of ten years."

But the report shows that even in 1924, after rehabilitation was all completed, there was a deficit of over $20,000, so that there was not much chance of any amount being set aside for depreciation.

Expenses Up, Revenue Down.

Moreover, operating expenses for 1923 increased from $66,130 to $70,710 in 1924, while the revenue decreased from $81,908 to $79,081.

In the 1923 report, the Hydro stated: "Prior to the acquisition of the property by the H.E.P.C., the line for some years had not been meeting its operation expenses and hence during the rehabilitation period the benefits from the suggested improvements would naturally not be fully apparent."

But the 1924 report, after all rehabilitation was completed, shows that the revenue was less than $9,000 in excess of operating expenses and, therefore, the railway was not much better off to meet its interest, sinking fund and depreciation charges. Interest charges alone had increased to nearly $24,000.

BELGIUM'S LOSS IS FOUR MILLION

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 5. — (Canadian Press).—Belgium to-day began the melancholy task of counting the losses from the worst flood the little country has experienced since 1740. While it will be days before the extent of the damage can be assessed with any degree of accuracy, the most conservative estimates place it well above 100,000,000 francs (about $4,500,000). Twelve persons are known to be dead, and it is feared this figure will be increased when reports arrive from those districts now isolated.

TANNERY CLUB GAVE CONCERT

Feature Musical Affair of Omemee's New Year's Eve.

A.Y.P.A. COMEDY.

OMEMEE, Jan. 5.—Another local triumph in amateur acting was scored on New Year's night in Coronation Hall, when the young people of the Anglican Young People's Association of Christ Church, in their annual entertainment, presented the comedy, "Facing the Music," by James Henry Durley. A full house greeted the young people, who in turn entertained the audience for two and a half hours. "Facing the Music" is a complicated tangle in which two men of the same name, John Smith, are the leading characters. One man is a minister, while the other is a man of the world. The wives of both men are away on vacation, when with the aid of servants, both men take up residence in the Mona Mansions. The Rev. Mrs. Smith returns home and in mistake goes to No. 19 instead of No. 69. Mr. Smith, of worldly type has, as his guest, Dick Desmond, who has never met the wife of his host. The housekeeper, Mrs. Ponting, who is also unknown to Mrs. Smith, falls in line, believing her to be the new mistress. Mrs. Smith of No. 19 also arrives home unexpectedly and is repulsed on all sides by those who believe her to be an imposter. In the meantime, the Rev. Mr. Smith is frantically searching for his wife, of whose coming he has received word, while Mr. Smith, of worldly fame, arrives home after a night out to find Mrs. Rev. Smith in possession of his flat. Dick Desmond is thoroughly enjoying the situation when the real Mrs. Smith appears. Finally, the Rev. John Smith calls on his neighbor, John Smith, and the tangle is happily straightened out.

The play which was under the direction of Mrs. T. C. Stephenson was well staged and well played.

A trio from a stringed quartette, Peterborough, furnished excellent music between the acts, which was heartily enjoyed by all.

The cast of characters was as follows:

Rev. John Smith—Harry Burgess.
John Smith—Horace Hill.
Dick Desmond—John Bent.
Col. Duncan Smith—Arthur Stephenson.
Sergeant Duffell (of Vine Street Police Station)—Reuben Reed.
Mabel (the minister's wife).—Marion Dickson.
Miss Fotheringay (an actress).—Carrie McQuade.
Mrs. Ford Bent.

The closing of the Old Year brought about numerous activities in and around Omemee. Misses Doris and Genevieve Sandy entertained a number of their friends at their home while Mr. and Mrs. Harold McConnell opened their home for a similar gathering. A dance was held in the new school, which has just been completed, near Mr. Norman Fee's farm. Many others skated the Old Year out and the New Year in.

On the same evening, the musical committee of the Omemee Tannery Club had arranged an interesting programme to be given in their club room, which was enjoyed by all present. Refreshments were served at the close and a social time spent.

The programme was as follows:
Piano Selection—Mrs. Rowland.
Song—Miss L. Parsons.
Recitation—Mr. Glen.
Chairman's Remarks—Mr. Stafford.
Duet—Misses Eva and Lillian Race.
Musical Monologue—"The Sea is His," Rev. E. W. Rowland.
Song—Mr. A. Leiper.
Reading—Miss M. Carey.
Piano Duet—Misses Race.
Remarks—Mr. W. Bennett.
Solo—Mr. W. Clemett.
Community Singing, led by Mr. Stafford, with accordian accompaniment.
Recitation—Miss M. Carey.
Song—Mr. E. Hurd.
Remarks—Mr. H. Lamb.
Snog—Mr. W. Clemett.
Recitation—Rev. E. W. Rowland.
Chorus—Farewell Christmas.
God Save the King.

Mr. and Mrs. David Weir and daughters were hostesses at a most enjoyable affair at their home on Wednesday evening, when the members of the United Church Choir and friends, numbering about 45, were right royally entertained.

Mr. Charles McCaffrey has disposed of his lot and dwelling on the corner of Queen and King Streets to Mr. William Burgess.

MORE PROMINENT MEN ARE ARRESTED

Hungarian Counterfeiting Plot Included Many National Figures.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Jan. 5.—(Canadian Press).—To-day was another one of the sensational disclosures in the thirty billion franc counterfeiting plot that has already brought a dozen prominent Hungarians within the shadow of prison walls. While detectives continued their raids in search of additional evidence, further arrests were made and the names of other notables allegedly involved were made public.

Among those taken into custody to-day was Baron Sigismund Perenyi, former Minister of the Interior and an intimate friend of the late Premier, Count Tisza. Count Szmreosani, a powerful political leader, was also arrested and a warrant was issued for Police Prefect Nadcsey, who left on a hurried "vacation" when the ramifications of the plot were first revealed.

THORNTON TO DISCUSS SHIPMENT OF GRAIN FROM CANADIAN PORTS WITH MARITIME BUSINESS GROUP

Conference Arranged For Saturday Next in Montreal By C.N.R. Head.

COMPLEX PROBLEM.

Advantage of Grain Owners Paramount in Shipping Scheme.

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Complaints having been made in the Maritime Provinces regarding the quantity of Canadian grain that is being exported through Halifax and Saint John as compared with United States ports, Sir Henry Thornton, chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways, has invited the Federal Parliamentary representatives and the officers of the Boards of Trade of the two Atlantic winter ports to meet him in conference. This meeting will take place at the headquarters of the railway in Montreal on Saturday next, when it is hoped that a plan may be formulated for concerted action that will lead to an improvement in the situation.

President's Statement.

This action follows upon a statement which Sir Henry Thornton sent to the Maritime Province interests, in which he said: "The control of the port of shipment for export grain lies entirely with the grain pools and the owners of the grain. There is every reason why the Canadian National Railways should desire Canadian ports to be used to the fullest extent but persuasion is the only pressure we can bring to bear and this is being fully employed. I do not think even the Parliament of Canada can exercise effective control in opposition to the inclinations of owners of grain. The subject is engaging the earnest effort of ourselves and other interests and will not be assisted by precipitous statements made without a full knowledge of the facts. The entire question is affected by economic shipping and marketing conditions of considerable complexity and a satisfactory conclusion will only be gained by a recognition of the sincerity of purpose by all sides coupled by harmonious effort."

APPEAL FOR INDUSTRIAL UNITY IN ENGLAND BASED ON CHRISTIANITY

Fifteen Prominent Labor Men Advocate the Principles of Christ.

EMPLOYERS, TOO.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Signatories to the appeal for unity in the industrial life, which has just been issued by the Industrial Christian Fellowship, are remarkable for their variance and political differences. Premier Baldwin some time ago made an appeal for industrial peace, which, at the time, created an enormous impression, but little has been heard of it since he brought it forward. Now it has every appearance of bearing fruit, for this appeal by Christian fellowship promises to be the most forward move that has been made for unity of capital and labor. The two appeals put forward by the fellowship for substitution of Christianity for materialism in a crusade for industrial unity are signed by most of the prominent men in the country in all ranks of life. One is signed by fifteen of the most conspicuous Labor men, and another bears names of scores of well-known employers, heads of public companies and industrial magnates of every kind.

What Is Needed.

"It is our own conviction that statesmanship will fail and political programs will prove futile to solve our serious troubles unless they embody the spirit and practice of Christ," says an appeal signed by the Labor party members. Among Labor signatories are ex-Premier MacDonald, Arthur Henderson, Phillip Snowden, Ben Spoor, J. H. Purcell, J. C. Cook, the miners' leader, Ben Tillett, and many others whose leanings are towards communism. Among the employers who have signed the appeal are Sir Ernest Dunn and W. L. Nichens, chairman of Cammell Laird's great shipbuilding firm.

Strongly Religious.

The documents, which express remarkable religious sentiments, have created a sensation, in that they are signed by many Laborites whose sympathies are rather toward the anti-Christian Socialism of Marx. "Christ gave us a large number of simple principles for goverance of our lives," the document states, "ordering our relationship with others which alone can produce peaceable humanitable society. We proclaim our belief in the Gospel of Christ."

TOWN MUST PAY COST OF AUDIT

Brockville's Books Found in Order By Provincial Scrutiny.

BILL FOR $8,000.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Obliged to pay approximately $8,000 to meet the expenses of a Provincial audit which failed to reveal either irregularity or wrong-doing, the Town Council is now suggesting that the Legislature amend the statute by providing that such audits may only be held at intervals of five years, that a request for an audit shall indicate the irregularities complained of, that the names of those signing a petition for an audit shall be made public, and that not less than 100 ratepayers shall sign such a petition instead of only 30 as now required.

Brockville's New Industry.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—The second unit of the Eugene F. Phillips electrical works, to be moved from Montreal, the wire mill, was placed in operation yesterday Mayor Reynolds, stepping upon the foot lever, started the machinery. The unit will employ 75 hands.

Dispensers In Court.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Nine physicians and eight druggists appeared in Police Court yesterday as witnesses in charges against eight local men of having obtained liquor prescriptions improperly.

22nd Year Reeve.

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—For the twenty-second consecutive year, M. B. Holmes has been re-elected Reeve of the village of Athens with a larger majority than he has ever before received.

Rouyn's J. P.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Robert C. Gamble, of Ottawa, pioneer miner of the Rouyn district, has been appointed by Premier Taschereau of Quebec as Justice of the Peace for the district of Rouyn.

Heiress Splurges.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Jan. 6.—(Canadian Press).—Mrs. Ethel Vernon, recently advised that she was one of the heirs to a huge fortune, left by Stephen Tomlinson of Kincardine, Ont., splurged Monday night to the extent of going to a show.

She refused to become excited over the prospect of becoming suddenly wealthy, saying, "Time enough to celebrate properly when the money is in my name in the bank."

RUBBER PRICE PEAK.

Firestone Positive Top Is Reached.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 6.—Harvey Firestone, tire manufacturer, Tuesday expressed the opinion that the peak in rubber prices has been reached and that a decline will come in time. Mr. Firestone, who is here on business, would not venture an opinion as to when the prices would start downward, but said he was positive that the top had been reached.

MILLBROOK SEEKS TO RETAIN BRANCH

District Was Represented in Conference About "Back Line" Train.

MILLBROOK, Jan. 6.—A deputation from this vicinity, which included F. W Bowen, M.P., A. J. Fallis, M.P.P., and Warden J. L. McCamus, went to Lindsay last Thursday to confer with C.N.R. officials regarding the proposed removal, after January 1st, of the local combined freight and pasenger train which passes through Milbrook twice each day, and serves the townships of Cavan, Manvers, Hope, Emily, and Ops.

The increased use of motor trucks for freight transportation was the reason advanced for discontinuing this mixed train which no longer pays, hence in the interests of economy its removal was apparently demanded.

An agrement between the former Grand Trunk and the townships mentioned reads that railways service was to be given for 99 years. Over seventy years of the contract have expired, and if the agreement still holds legally, it is claimed train service must be continued until the specified time has been fulfilled.

The present arrangement arrived at is that the train, locally known as "Britton's" after a conductor of that name who was in charge some years ago, is to be continued for one month.

A number of pupils from here who are attending Port Hope High school find this train a decided convenience allowing them to reach school each morning before 9 a.m. Forced to go by the later 8.35 a.m. train would necessitate a change in their time table for studies as they could not be present until after the opening hour.

The train runs between Lindsay and Port Hope on the old Midland line and the older residents remember many incidents connected with the opening period of this road in the early days of Millbrook's history.

The ringing of the town bell, and the louder-toned bell of St. Thomas' church, marked the passing of the Old Year, and the ushering in of the New. Contrary to the usual custom no watch night service was held in the Anglican church owing to the fact that the rector, Rev. Canon Allen, has only recently recovered sufficiently from an extended illness to be able to take any part in the Sunday services. For some years the local band has played as the Old Year passed into history and the New Year was welcomed, but this was omitted in the present instance apparently because no one in authority made an effort to have the custom repeated.

The first skating of the season was enjoyed on the rinks last week, the Cosmos club giving the free use of the ice for the opening night in connection with its open-air rink. Quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity of enjoying a skate on a rink of such goodly dimensions. Several of the younger kiddies, who received their first skates from 'Santa Claus' on Christmas morning went to the smaller covered rink for their initial attempt to learn this healthful exercise.

Some of the men enjoyed their first curling on New Year's day though the usual match between the President and Vice-President did not take place. The formal choice of rinks and skips will be arranged this week, a meeting of the curling club being called for in the immediate future.

The invitation dance held in the armouries on Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the Cosmos club, was attended by about ninety couples and was voted the "best yet."

Decorations of the club colors, myrtle and orange, made the interior of the building most attractive, and excellent music was furnished by Ken Blood's orchestra from Peterborough.

Quite a number were present from outside points. The club made arrangements to do its own catering for the supper which was served about midnight, and which was dainty, appetizing, and lacked nothing in respect to quantity.

Financially all claims were fully met by the door receipts, but there was practically no surplus for the club treasury.

The annual Commencement Day of the Port Hope High School was held during Christmas week, and proved a very successful and enjoyable occasion.

Mr. D. H. Chisholm, K.C., chairman of the school board presided, and made a formal address as did also Rev. Dr. Rigby, Principal of Trinity College School, Port Hope.

The valedictory address was given by Miss Agnes O'Neill, who in addition to other honors won the Parson's scholarship in French.

Among the pupils from Millbrook who are attending school in Port Hope this term, and who won prizes were Jas. Larmer who brought home the senior boys' silver cup for highest number of points in athletic event, and Ernest Burnham who came second and received a white gold medal and a number of ribbons

At the Interscholastic Provincial Athletic meet held at Oshawa last September, J. Larmer won two firsts, while E. Burnham had third place in the 100 yard dash. At the Intercollegiate meet at Peterborough in October E. Burnham won three firsts and J. Larmer one. At the annual Field Day in Port Hope for 1925 in the senior boys' events, J. Larmer carried off three firsts; two seconds, and one third; E. Burnham won four firsts and one second.

The silver cup was presented by Mr. Mr. E. Brown, the medals by Senator Mulholland, and the ribbons by His Worship, the Mayor.

The High School orchestra, which has twelve members all pupils in the school, and in which Ernest Burnham is cornetist, furnished music throughout the evening, and for the dance which followed.

Is Your Back The Weak Point

Then get your kidneys right by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Very few people are in perfect health. There is a weak spot somewhere. When you get tired or your system gets a little run down you feel the effects at your weak spot.

If your weak spot is your back, then you may suspect that your kidneys are not in perfect order. The back aches or is weak and sore; you may have headaches; there will be dryness of the skin, pains in the limbs and disorders of the bladder.

The quickest way to regulate the kidneys is by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are bound to be effective because they arouse the action of the kidneys, liver and bowels and thereby ensure the elimination of poisons from the system.

Breakfast is not popular with fashionable women just now. To keep their figures slim, they limit the morning meal to an apple, six grapes, a glass of orange juice, or even, in one notable case, a small lump of ice, sucked slowly.

Left arm sprained and ligaments torn

FELL FROM TOP OF BOX CAR

Sustains painful injury but gets quick relief

Men who handle big hazardous jobs demand quick, effective help for sprains, strains, lame backs and bruises.

A freight brakeman on the Chicago and Northwestern Railway fell off the top of a box car on his left arm, spraining it and tearing the ligaments loose.

"I suffered great pain," he writes. "Then I got a bottle of Sloan's Liniment and it relieved the pain right away. I have now no pain to speak of at all. The swelling has nearly all gone down." (Name and address given on request.)

What is the magic of this amazingly effective remedy? Sloan's sends an increased supply of healing blood right to the spot that hurts. That's what conquers the pain. No need to rub. Sloan's does the whole job. Just pat it on. Quickly and surely, it kills pain, reduces swelling and inflammation, drives out stiffness from lame muscles. Get a bottle. All druggists—35 cents.

CHARLES H. DAVIDSON HAS SEEN MANY YEARS MUNICIPAL SERVICE

First Entered Campbellford Council in 1901, Heading Polls.

SEEKS WARDENSHIP

Campbellford Has Not Had Warden for Thirty-One Years.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 6.—It was in the year 1901 that Reeve Chas. H. Davidson, who is now leading candidate for the Wardenship of the United Counties, made his first venture into the municipal field, offering himself as a candidate for the Council. Campbellford in those days was a village and Mr. Davidson was a young man and a comparatively new resident, having come from Ottawa when a mere youth, but his popularity even at that distant day may be gauged by the fact that he headed the poll. The late W. J. (afterwards Mayor) Doxsee was second and the other councillors elected were Charles Dunk and T. G. Gillespie. The late Charles Smith, the original promoter of the municipal power and lighting plant for Campbellford, was re-elected reeve by a majority of two over Ed. Nancarrow.

There must be something magnetic in the make up of a man, something about his playing qualities, who like Reeve Davidson started his municipal career so long ago, and now with two elections by acclamation for the reeveship to his credit, goes to Cobourg with this prestige to aid him in the race for the highest municipal office in the United Counties.

In the past 24 years Reeve Davidson, to use his own words, has "been trimmed more than once and may be trimmed again", but he has always managed to come back. He has been in the Counties Council since 1919 with the exception of the year 1923 when he was defeated by J. A. Anderson.

Reeve Davidson can plead as one of his claims to the wonderful senority of service over any other man who may be nominated against him. Another argument that will be used on his behalf is that Campbellford, the second most important urban municipality, has not had the Wardenship since C. L. Owen, now postmaster, held that position 31 years ago.

When the new Counties Council meets in January session, a large and influential delegation will go from here to Cobourg to boost Reeve Davidson for the position which he seeks.

A Rival From Percy.

Percy Township will put a candidate in the field against Reeve Davidson, Reeve John McCubbin, who has been tendered the honor of an election by acclamation after many years efficient service both in the township Council and in Cobourg. There is in the two counties no men perhaps, who has made a closer study of public affairs than Reeve McCubbin and he is recognized as an authority on municipal law. He has brought to his township hundreds of dollars in teachers' income taxes, by his own interpretation of the statute over which lawyers have differed but which, it appears, Reeve McCubbin has rendered correctly. The watchword of his public career has been economy and he has always insisted upon the transaction of public business without leaving any legal loopholes that may cause trouble later.

Reeve McCubbin's candidature will be watched with special interest. It has been said that politics figures in the election of a Warden and to what extent this is true may be demonstrated when the votes are counted.

List of Candidates Shrink.

Following the December session of the Counties Council The Examiner published the names of nine reeves who had announced themselves for the Wardenship. This list has been reduced as several of those whose names appeared in it will not be members in 1926. Reeve Holdsworth of Hamilton Township has retired and former Reeve Corbett of Cobourg is also out of the race. When the returns of Monday's election are all in it will probably be found that other reeves have fallen by the roadside.

She Was Troubled With Chronic Constipation

Once your bowels become constipated you are in for a lot of trouble, as constipation is one of the most prolific sources of disease that the human race is addicted to, therefore a free motion of the bowels every day should be the aim of everyone who aspires to perfect health.

Mrs. O. W. Lawrence, Cloverdale East, N.B., writes:—"I was troubled with chronic constipation, and became so bad I was almost afraid to eat anything.

One day I saw your advertisement of Milburn's

LAXA-LIVER PILLS

so I got three vials, and after taking them I have never been troubled since with constipation."

Pigeon With Broken Leg Flies To Doctor's Office

HASTINGS, Jan. 6—An unusual incident happened in Hastings on Friday last, when a pigeon came to the door of Dr. W. N. Campbell's office, gently tapping. On hearing the gentle knock those inside opened the door and the bird walked into the waiting room unbidden. On examining the bird it was found that the leg was broken. The injured member was attended to and the pigeon is now quite at home in the new quarters.

CONCERT GIVEN BY STIRLING PEOPLE

Fine Programme Put On By Members of St. Andrew's Church.

STIRLING, Jan. 5.—The annual New Year's entertainment of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Sunday School was held Friday night, and was a very successful affair. The Opera House was crowded to the doors, and the receipts were over $150. The following programme was rendered in a very efficient manner by those taking part:

The minister, Rev. Robt Simpson, presided. The first number was a chorus by the pupils of the school; recitation by James Johnston; dolls' chorus by a dozen little girls with dolls in their arms; musical monologue by Miss Thelma Green; recitation by Miss Mae Johnston; a pantomime, entitled "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," presented by a dozen or more girls. This number deserves special mention. With the colored lights used and the singing of Miss Ruth Gibson, a very pleasing effect was given to the rendering of this number; a play, entitled "Barbara's Revenge," in four acts, was well presented by the following: Messrs. Wm. Anderson, R. W. Meiklejohn, Harper Rollins, Arthur Duncan and John M. McGee, Mrs. R. W. Meiklejohn, Mrs Nolan, Miss Smith and Miss Agnes Morton.

To the new Life Members of the W.M.S. of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Hastings:

Dear Friends,—

I had long desired to give to the Lord's work, one tenth. So when opportunity came to me, I shared between Moorefield and my old love for the W.M.S. of Hastings.

May God bless this small gift as a means of furthering the good work of the Society and may He also bless each one to go forth in His strength.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. JANET OAKMAN.

The most expensive of all modern funerals was that of the Emperor Mutso-hito of Japan. The grave was made on the top of a steep hill, and a special cable-railway had to be constructed to carry the enormously heavy coffin up the precipitous slope. The total cost of the many ceremonies involved was not less than $1,000,000.

WHERE A WALKING STICK WILL PIERCE THE EARTH'S CRUST.

New Zealand is one of those spots that is not popular with tourists, and so we seldom hear of the beauties of its scenery or the charm of its diversions. But this out-of-the-way land has attractions that are unequaled in any other part of the globe.

For centuries the Maoris inhabited New Zealand and the museums are filled with exhibits of their culture. It is a fascinating study, this examining the relics of a bygone civilization on the very ground where it formerly existed.

But even more fascinating than this is the opportunity to visit the land of hot geysers, volcanoes of mud, hot springs and steam vents. The region south of Auckland, almost in the centre of the North Island, is known as the "thermal region." Here the earth is continually at a boiling point. The crust of the earth is so thin that if one pokes a walking stick into it a jet of steam issues forth.

This region is also famous for its mineral springs. The government maintains tremendous bath houses, where expert medical attention is furnished to those who seek the healing powers of the springs.

At one time there was a famous construction that graced the interior of New Zealand, just in the region known as "thermal." It was the Pink and White Terraces which lent glory to the land. This beautiful work was regarded as one of the wonders of the world, and it is needless to add that it was the pride of every inhabitant.

But, unfortunately, the very natural splendors which added beauty to the scene combined to destroy it. In 1886, an eruption of Mount Tarawera destroyed completely the structure that had been reared so carefully and cherished so devotedly.

A Jet of Steam Issues Forth.

The famous Waimangu Geyser which, at one time, threw its waters as high as 1,600 feet, now gives vent to its energy only in a continued rumbling and boiling. The sound is alarming, but there is no cause to be afraid.

Such is the exotic beauty of this New Zealand of which we hear so little. Were it better known, we should realize that it combines the scenic beauties of many lands in one. It has mountains, sea, lakes, geysers, volcanoes and springs in the list of its natural advantages.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

In the Winter time in northern climates it is important to keep the air of the home fresh and sweet. You know how quickly flowers will droop and die unless they have fresh, cool air. Of course, if it is too cold they freeze, as your family would. It is important to exercise common-sense in such matters.

I cannot resist saying that man uses commonsense in almost everything except the care of his health. It would seem the natural thing to look after the body, to give it the same attention that plants, the automobile and the golf clubs have. But the body does not get one-half the attention that most material possessions receive.

Endless experiments have been made in an attempt to find out what degree of temperature is best for health. As in almost everything else, science has forced us to revise a lot of our old ideas.

It is believed now that what we usually describe as overheating does not decrease the power to work. The ability to do hard work is present, but the inclination to do it is not there.

The result is the same. It takes a lot of character for a man to work when he doesn't feel like it. It requires the stimulation cool air gives the skin to whip the unwilling spirit into an eagerness to work.

On this account the living and working rooms should be kept fairly cool. Most writers mention 68 degrees as the proper temperature. That is too low to suit me. For my comfort and happiness 70 to 72 degrees is about right.

Not only is temperature important, but the moisture or humidity of the air must be considered. If the air is too dry it is irritating and distressing. The skin and other tissues of the body lose moisture, because it is expelled into the air. The nose and mouth feel dry and parched.

A pan of water placed on the stove, the radiator, or in connection with the hot air furnace, will help a lot to give moisture to the air. Open windows overcome the drying effects of heating. A narrow space at top or bottom of the window will do much to give the proper amount of humidity. If this is covered by a screen of cloth it will break unpleasant drafts of air.

Free movement of the air is important. It does much to prevent unpleasant effects of a warm atmosphere. Sunlight is essential. Dust and vapors should be guarded against.

Give thought to these things, and the Winter will pass without the ill effects it may have produced in other years.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silvar

DORIS HELPS A LITTLE FIELD MOUSE.

One morning as Doris was on her way to the store for her Mama, she heard someone crying softly among the grasses at the edge of the woods.

Doris looked all around before she finally discovered a dear little Field Mousie sitting by the side of a clump of grass, crying bitterly.

"Why, Mrs. Field Mousie, don't be frightened, I won't harm you," said Doris, kindly. "What's the trouble?"

"Oh dear! oh, dear!" sobbed Mrs. Field Mousie, "Someone has stolen my twins. Whatever shall I do? They were here just a few seconds ago and now they have disappeared and I can't find them any place."

"Now that is too bad," said Doris, swallowing the tears that gathered in her own throat, "I'll help you find them. Maybe they are hiding in the tall grasses," and she began looking carefully among the bushes and grasses at the side of the roadway. When they had searched all around, a happy thought popped into Doris's head. "I know! I'll wish for Happy Giggles or—"

"Don't need to go any further," chirped a tiny voice and a dear little elfin with a tall, pointed cap on his funny little head, popped up beside Doris and Mrs. Field Mousie. "I'm right here, Mrs. Field Mousie, I can tell you where your twins are this very second."

Mrs. Field Mousie became so excited she couldn't speak but she caught hold of the elfin's hand.

"Take my other hand, Doris," said

"I Won't Harm You."

Happy Giggles, "and we'll take you with us. You see, there is a terrible Bluebeard living around in these woods and it's high time to punish him."

Then away they sailed through the air to the tallest tree and there in the very top, Mrs. Field Mousie saw her two babies sitting shivering on the limb of the tree, crying. They were so glad to see their mother and Happy Giggles they hardly knew what to do.

"Old Mr. Shrike stole us and brought us here and now he has gone to get my sisters," cried the largest Field Mousie.

Doris shivered, for there on the dead limbs of the tree all around her were the dead bodies of the little field mice, crickets and grasshoppers. Mr. Shrike Bird had stolen and hung there so they would be ready when he was hungry.

"This must be stopped," said Happy Giggles. "I guess the best way to stop it would be to bring all these little fellows back to life again and when he comes and finds his cupboard bare, he'll know something is wrong. Then he will fly away from this part of the woods."

Then with his magic whistle, Happy Giggles blew three times and all the little meadow folks came to life. Laughing and chatting, they all followed Doris, Happy Giggles, Mrs. Field Mousie and the twins back to the meadows.

Just as they all alighted in front of Mrs. Field Mouse's house, the shadow of a bird fell across the path and a dusky grey bird about the size of a robin, flew into the tree. Seeing the bodies gone he grew frightened and flew away. That was the last time Mama Field Mousie and her twins ever saw Mr. Shrike in that part of the meadows, thanks to Doris and Happy Giggles, the elfin from Make-believe-land.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7.

A generally fortunate state of affairs is predicted on the basis of the very interesting planetary configurations for this day. Most of them point to lively and progressive conditions with the exception of those in the employment of others, who should take care to safeguard their positions. It may be a good time for new ventures and for business generally, especially in those things having to do with catering to women. It may also be a propitious occasion for all feminine interests, practical and romantic.

Those whose birthday it is are under auspices for an interesting year in business and in heart and home affairs. Women should be cultivated in business as well as socially. Those in employment are warned to be careful. A child born on this day should have a kind and gracious disposition and be well liked and popular. It should be talented in the refined arts and find happiness in life. It should also be taught to protect its health.

ARTICLE No. 24

Some time ago the writer heard of the dummy playing the hand, instead of the declarer, and that the mistake was not discovered until the completion of the fourth trick. An even more astonishing error has just been brought to the writer's attention. Z dealt and bid one diamond, A bid two clubs and all passed. For some unknown reason, A got it into his head that Z had obtained the final bid so led to the first trick. What is still more remarkable, the other players didn't notice the error and Z proceeded to play the hand and with clubs as trumps. At the completion of the sixth trick, one of the players realized what had happened and called attention to the error. The case was referred by telephone to a member of the card committee of a well-known club. This player was noted for his sense of humor and ruled that Z must continue to play the hand, but that for the remaining seven tricks, "diamonds" must be trumps. Truly a most remarkable situation and a truly humorous solution.

The trick bidder is with us once again and this time the trick bid proved a costly experiment:

	Hearts — Q, 10, 8, 7 Clubs — K, 10, 9, 6 Diamonds — none Spades — Q, J, 6, 5, 3
Hearts — 6, 2 Clubs — A, 3 Diamonds — K, 8, 7, 5, 3, 2 Spades — A, 10, 8	Y A B Z	Hearts — A, 9 Clubs — Q, J, 8, 5 Diamonds — Q, 9, 4 Spades — K, 9, 7, 2
	Hearts — K, J, 5, 4, 3 Clubs — 7, 4, 2 Diamonds — A, J, 10, 6 Spades — 4

No score, first game. Z dealt and passed, A bid one no-trump, Y doubled and B passed. Z bid two hearts, A and Y passed and B bid two no-trump. Z and A passed and Y now decided that it was a good time for a trick bid. He figured that if he bid three hearts, his opponents would probably pass and that game would be impossible. On the other hand, if he bid three clubs, he would probably get doubled, and then if he bid three hearts, his opponents would also double that and thus give him game if he made the bid. For those reasons, he bid three clubs and sure enough, B doubled. Z now got scary and bid three diamonds which A doubled. Y now had the chance he had planned for so bid three hearts. B doubled three hearts and all passed. A had the opening lead and here's where the trick bid acted as a boomerang for A decided that he would lead the ace of clubs because of his partner's double of three clubs. His natural opening irrespective of the three clubs' double was the ace of spades so that the only effect of Y's trick bid was to indicate to his opponents the only lead that would defeat the three heart bid. The club lead defeats the bid one trick while the spade lead enables the declarer to set up the spade suit and just make his contract. Y's trick bid was very foxy but didn't produce the results expected.

The play of the hand is usually more interesting than the bidding and the player who can obtain the maximum number of tricks is the one most admired. As a matter of fact the bidding is much more important than the play but the latter is more showy and therefore more admired.

One of the surest ways to win tricks is by forcing discards. Your opponents have to guess which card to let go and as usual with guesses, they guess wrong more often than right. On some hands, however, it is possible to force discards in such a way that the opponents have no defense. When such a play is possible an opponent is said to be "squeezed," that is, forced to discard winning cards. Good players are always on the lookout for the "squeeze" play and are well pleased when they get a chance to work it. In the following problem, Z had a chance to "squeeze" both A and B on the discard.

Problem No. 12

	Hearts — A, 9, 7 Clubs — none Diamonds — none Spades — 9, 7
Hearts — J, 10, 8 Clubs — none Diamonds — none Spades — 10, 4	Y A B Z	Hearts — Q, 6, 3 Clubs — none Diamonds — 8, 3 Spades — none
	Hearts — K, 4 Clubs — 10 Diamonds — J, 6 Spades — none

Clubs are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can he win all five tricks against any defense? Solution in the next article.

"Things have happened so rapidly, so confusingly," began Aunt Celimena, "I don't know which way to turn."

"This way," advised Sweetie, pointing to the hall. "You turn right around this way to go straight upstairs; eyes left. Join me and you won't be seen by the world. Pretty slick, that, eh? I'll have to jot it down and sell it to the Marines."

"Tell it to the Marines is the way the saying goes," mumbled Aunt Celimena, following Sweetie to the door.

"I know it but you can't tell the Marines anything, ma'am, and you can sell them the Pacific Ocean."

Left alone with Connemara, Bing at once proceeded to press his suit—or, rather, it was Mr. Merrill's suit, Connie, turning crimson, pushed him away. She had caught a glimpse of Lacy approaching from the hallway.

"Oh, I say, Connie," protested Bing. "We're all alone now. We're engaged, aren't we? Didn't you——"

"We are not engaged," she broke in quickly. Lacy was entering the room. "I don't know what you are talking about."

"Didn't you send Salt Adams a bunch of your hair, and wasn't that your way of letting me know you bobbed—Great Scott!" For the first time he had observed the blue ribbon bandeau. "You don't mean you're still keeping up that nonsense about covering your hair? It's the silliest thing I've ever—Look here, is it or isn't it?"

She continued to smile at him impishly, one finger patting the blue ribbon more securely in place.

"Connie," Bing began desperately, "I'm asking you to marry me."

"In the presence of witnesses," remarked Lacy dryly.

"The devil!" Bing gasped, whirling. "The gentleman has just proposed to you," said Lacy, addressing Connie. "It's a question that calls for an answer, yes or no."

"You'll oblige me, sir, by keeping out of this," exploded Bing angrily.

"Impossible," said Lacy, without removing his gaze from Connie's lovely face. There was a light in his eyes that could not be misinterpreted. Her own eyes wavered, and he had read something in their shining depths that gave him courage.

"Some other time, Bing," murmured the girl. "Don't hurry me."

"That's all right, old chap," beamed Lacy, slightly exalted. "She's already been through a lot of unpleasant things in the past few hours."

"Yes—let's change the subject," cried Connemara, eagerly and gratefully. "Tell us all about yourself, Bing. Tell me the whole story. Aunt Celimena seems awfully vague about everything."

"We might as well sit down," said Lacy hospitably. He conducted Connemara to a comfortable davenport and sat down beside her.

"Well," began Bing, resignedly, and forthwith related the experiences of the night. He had seated himself in a morris chair some distance away. At the conclusion of his story he urged Connemara to tell him everything that had happened to her.

She arose. "No, Bing; I will tell it all to you when I have more time. I have work to do now. I must clear myself in Mr. Lacy's eyes. He believes I am mixed up in some way with that gang of smugglers. I cannot rest until I have placed that fifty thousand dollars in Mr. Bob Merrill's hands to be turned over to the government!"

"Fifty thousand what?" gasped Bing, as she started to leave the room.

"Bones," replied Lacy, following her.

"I hid the money down on the beach," she explained, hurriedly, "near the house where that funny-looking Bugle lives."

"I'll go with you, Connie," said Bing, springing to his feet. Stupefication had held him rooted to the chair.

"See here, Carrington," said Lacy, surveying the late arrival with a critical, even pitying air; "you can't go running about in that awful suit of clothes. You're a sight, old man. I'll tell you what. We're about the same size. I'll fit you out with a suit of mine. Come along to my room with me. Don't go yet, please," to Connemara. "I'll be down in a minute or two and we'll go to the beach together while Mr. Carrington is changing his clothes. It's too far for you to walk there and back, so I'll get the roadster. We can park it at the Merrills' and cut through their place to the beach. By the way, you can use my razors too, Carrington, if you like. You certainly need a shave. So don't hurry. Take all the time you like. No doubt you'd like a bath. You——"

"I had a bath last night," said Bing surlily.

"The more the merrier," quoth the sparkling-eyed Lacy, slapping the other on the back. Then, grasping his arm, he hurried him upstairs, but not without a look of appeal to the girl below.

In an incredibly short space of time he rejoined her and they set out for the beach. But it was not until they had left the little green roadster in the Merrills' drive, and were on their way down to the water that either of them spoke.

"I've never forgotten you," Lacy said then, softly and abruptly, out of that long silence. "Ever since the day in Auteuil your face has haunted me. I've thought of nothing else. In my dreams——"

"Do you think I belong to the Swede's gang?" she interrupted darkly.

"Good heavens, no! You couldn't! You are an angel. Listen! I swear to you, Connemara, I've been in love with you ever since the day I first saw you. I've——"

"Hush! You mustn't say such things to me."

"You are blushing! And how lovely you are when the color spreads over—Oh, I say! By George! It has just occurred to me that you may think I am mixed up in this smuggling business. For Heaven's sake, you—you don't think that, do you?" He stopped short. His eyes were troubled.

"Of course I don't. How stupid of you!"

"Well, then I repeat, I've been in love with you for months, Connemara. I—I wonder if you remember meeting me over there in France. I don't suppose I made the slightest impression on you then but——"

"I remember you very well," she interrupted demurely. "I have an excellent memory. Will it please you if I say I have never forgotten you, Mr. Lacy?"

He gulped. Then, in rather a daze: "And you are not in love with that chap back there or—or with anyone else?"

She smiled. "Don't hurry me so," she murmured. "Oh," she cried, in sudden confusion, and with no little relief, "there is the beach. Down there is where I hid the money. Come on, Mr. Lacy. We mustn't waste any time."

"I am trying not to," he exclaimed, as he hurried along after her flying figure. "Wait a second! Answer me, Connemara. Do you—do you love me?"

Straight Lines Assert Importance

The straight silhouette, which vies in importance with the flaring line, is charmingly portrayed in this model developed in one of the dainty new foulard dotted crêpes. The frock is straight in line from shoulder to hem, showing just a little fulness over the bust where the front is slashed in yoke effect. The turn down collar is fashioned of soft-tone material, as is the wide gipsy girdle which is crushed into a buckle at the front. The long simple sleeves are gathered into narrow bands at the wrists. The diagram shows how easy it is to put the dress together, and pattern No. 1098 is in sizes 16, 18 and 20 years (or 34, 36 and 38 inches bust). Size 18 years (36 bust) requires 3¾ yards 32-inch, or 2¼ yards 54-inch material. Price 20 cents.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am going with a girl who I think loves me, but I am uncertain as to whether I really love her or not. I go to her house and take her to shows and dances for a couple of weeks regularly and then I will drop off seeing her for a few week and not even see her. Then I will go back again. She rarely goes out with other boys. I am twenty-two and she is twenty and I think it it about time I got married. How can I really tell whether I really love her or not?

Hoping to hear from you. I remain, WAITING.

WAITING: Your difficulty is evidently an honest one, but it is rather hard to decide. Someone who likes snap sentences has said: 'When in doubt, don't,' which would mean that if you have any doubts about your own depth of affection, you had better not ask the young lady to marry you. The assertion has been made that a constant thought about one person proves you are in love with them, but this is not necessarily so. It might be a sort of obsession or fixed habit of the mind that would cause one to think a good deal of another individual for a time and yet might not mean that any depth of affection was involved in the habit. And absence is not always a good test either. You might go away for a year, fail to find a girl who struck your fancy, come back and marry this one and then find that you weren't in love with her, after all. I am going to advise you to stop thinking so much of love, although I know you won't like such advice. The best marriages are sometimes those that are founded on mutual respect and affection, rather than passionate love, which has a habit of wearing another face in later years. However, if you are one of the type who counts the world well lost, and all that sort of thing, there is one test that is quite good. How much would you be willing to give up for this young lady? I don't mean just giving up a dance, for instance, if she chanced to have a headache and didn't want to go out and you decided to give up your evening's entertainment also. But would you give up a fixed habit at her request Would you make a resolution to refuse a drink of liquor for a years time, say, or give up smoking cigarettes if you happened to be accustomed to getting through five or six packets daily, or would you go to church regularly Sunday mornings, when you wanted to have a good sleep, just because she asked you to do so? Pick out your favorite habit or amusement and dcide honestly, if she were to ask you to give it up forever or for a time, would you do it with a good grace or would you say: "No jane is going to make me jump through a hoop. There are too many girls to bother giving that much up for her."

In England it is a belief of many mothers that the head of a newborn baby should be washed in brandy to prevent it from catching cold.

WEDDING BELLS

MARSDEN—SIMPSON.

ALDERVILLE, Jan. 6.—Alderville United Church was beautifully decorated this evening for the wedding of Olive Marguerite, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Simpson of Alderville and Mr. Wallace Marsden, second eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Marsden of Alderville.

Beneath an arch of evergreen entwined with white streamers and pink roses, with large white bell suspended from the centre, the ceremony was performed at six o'clock by Rev. H. Wilding, pastor of the church, asisted by Rev. J. N. Lovelace of Roseneath. At the appointed hour, the bridegroom, with his brother, Mr. Leslie Marsden, who acted as best man, took their places and awaited the coming of the bride.

To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. R. Black, aunt of the groom, the bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away. She wore a lovely gown of white satin, with white silk stockings and silver brocaded slippers. Her tulle veil was arranged in cap effect, caught with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of lily of the valley and bridal roses.

The bride was attended by Miss Reta Mardsen, cousin of the groom, as bridesmaid, who was daintily gowned in pale pink silk with shoes and stockings to match, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. Ushers were: Fred Simpson, Jr., brother of the bride and Amos Marsden, uncle of the groom. Tiny bows of white satin ribbon marked the pews of the relatives. During the signing of the register, Mrs. P. Black assisted by Mrs. Wilding sang, "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden". Lohengrim's wedding march was then played by Mrs R. Black as the bridal party passed out of the church and led the way to the Town Hall where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served to two hundred guests. Guests from Hiawatha, Cavan, Curve Lake, Shannonville, Baltimore, Hastings, Castleton, Roseneath and Alderville were present. The bride and groom received many beautiful and useful presents from their many friends.

After the reception the bridal party, with their guests, repaired to the home of the bride's parents, where dancing was indulged in until the wee sma' hours of the morning, after which the happy couple left amid showers of rice and confetti for their home on the Cobourg Road.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN UNITED CHURCH

Last Night's Meeting at Trinity Church Was Well Attended.

The special services being conducted this week at Trinity Church, under the auspices of the United Churches in Peterboro, are growing in interest and devotion. The service last night was well attended; those present were inspired and challenged by the message which was given. Rev. J. E. Todd, of George Street Church, was the speaker, and the theme being Jesus and the individual. He based his remarks upon John 1:14: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

The study of religious and philosophical thought had been the story of the quest for God. Men had searched for God; a chosen few might have obtained yet the majority were saying with Job: "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him."John however commences his gospel account by telling of Gods search for men. Before a great painting two men stood—one an artist, the other a layman; both saw the canvas, the figures, etc. The artist sees the soul, the spirit which is revealed to him through his artistic soul, and to get the layman to see the picture, he must explain to him in simple terms the meaning and the spirit of the picture. God to reveal Himself must enter into the life of humanity in a special manner, and this was done through the "Word becoming flesh." God sent His Son who became clothed again in terms of our humanity. He came in such an appealing, alluring way that He won the attention, interest, affection and love of the people whom He tried to serve.

When Jesus crossed the crowded ways of life He impressed men with the fact that they counted and counted with Him tremendously. The parables of the Lost Coin, the Lost Sheep, the Lost Son, all demonstrated this truth; then His personal experiences with such characters as the Woman of Sycher, despised and frowned upon, the demon-possessed lad, who was forced to live among the tombs, the publican Zaccheus, yet their lives were transformed, and they became new creatures, because Jesus made them understand that with Him and in His programme they really counted.

Jesus could see the real man, behind the trappings and social cutsoms such as place, position and environment. He saw the real value of manhood and dealt with people for what they were, not for the position they ocupied in the social ladder.

The speaker then made a closing appeal to all Christian people and workers to follow the method of Jesus in dealing with people in order that we might lead them in the way of truth and life.

LUMBER JACKS NOW WASH THRICE DAILY

Picturesque Figure of Fiction Replaced By Student or Foreigner.

FORT WILLIAM, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Canada's lumberjack, the bearded, hard-drinking, swearing, picturesque figure around whom romance and fiction have ever entwined, is no more. His time is past, never to return, says W. C. Millar, on returning here from a visit through the lumber camps in the district. Mr. Millar is Provincial Sanitary Inspector for Ontario.

Although there are about 8,000 men employed in lumbering operations in Northern Ontario, Mr. Miller declares he found nowhere the lumberjack as painted in novels. In his long tour of inspection, he found that the camps were filled with ambitious young men, saving money for a college education and hard-working foreigners laying aside a "nest egg." They wash three times a day, they shave and bathe regularly. Three times a day they enjoy meals as good as served in many hotels, Mr. Millar said.

Every man had an individual bed. Baths and shower huts are provided. Hot and cold water is always on tap. Beans and bacon, the inspector asserted, had given way to steak and onion. The men were very polite and many devoted their spare time to reading and music. There was a total absence of the rollicking and boisterousness characteristic of former days.

It is stated that more than $2,000,000 will be paid to men in wages and food in the various camps this winter. Another $30,000 is being spent on medical supplies. Next year when the expected pulpwood development starts, it is declared that 30,000 men will be employed in the Northern Ontario woods.

In a year's time, white pine now being cut in the Quetico forest, will be used in the finishing of homes in Chicago, Detroit and other large cities of the United States; Jack pine cut all through the district west of White River, will be used in the manufacture of railway coaches, that bring in immigrants, and box cars to move next year's wheat crop; pulpwood from the Nipigon Straits will be on the bookshelves of the reading public, while poplar from the Pee Dee district will be used in making packing cases for the products of the large packing cities on the continent.

RAT IMMIGRATION MENACES PRAIRIES

Authority Says Actual Plague Improbable Because of Deep Snow.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 6.—(Canadian Press).—Manitoba is menaced by a veritable rodent plague and, according to reports, the fields are so badly infested in certain localities as to cause alarm. While the Provincial Department of Agriculture has information of serious damage by rats and mice to grain in stacks and storage, the situation so far has not reached the stage where renewal of the "rat virus" campaign of a few years ago, is regarded as necessary by the authorities. Measures, however, are being taken in affected areas to eradicate the destructive pest.

Manitoba has no native rat, authorities point out, except, of course, the muskrat. All the rats in the province have come in during the past twenty years, chiefly from the United States.

According to Prof. V. W. Jackson, of the Manitoba Agricultural College, a pair of rats, given plenty of room and food, will produce 20,155,392 offspring in three years. One rat will eat two pounds of grain a year and do damage to a great deal more. The cost of upkeep per rat has been estimated at $1.80 in Great Britain, $1.20 in Denmark, and $1.00 in France. The United States Department of Agriculture, according to Prof. Jackson, estimates that there are 350 million rats in that country, and that they cost the nation $200,000,000 a year — so that the equivalent of 200,000 farmers are kept busy raising food for rats. Rats have been known to attack live animals and fat pigs have died as a result of having holes eaten in them. The rodents occasionally knaw the hoofs of horses until they bleed.

Except under unusual conditions, an actual plague of rats in Western Canada is regarded as improbable, says Prof. Jackson. Deep snow traps the rats, and unless he is fortunately situated as to food and drink during the winter months, his numbers are greatly reduced. When food runs short, rats eat their young and often each other.

The New Profession—Fur Farming

(Dun's Bulletin)

The fox-farming industry, which was born in Prince Edward Island, worked its way over the entire Dominion, crossed the border into the United States, and later penetrated into many other countries. Men have come from all over the globe to follow the novel industry in its home in Canada, and foundation stock has gone from the Dominion to establish the fox cult in Russia, Germany, Japan, France, Holland, Scotland, England and other countries.

Fox-farming is now a stabilized industry of dependable returns. Animals have been brought to a high pitch of perfection, and the years of experimentation have accumulated a fund of knowledge and reliable information available to the novice who can engage in the activity with every possibility of making it a successful venture. Having effected this much for the pioneer fox cult, Canada is setting out to do the same for the broader activity of fur farming. She is pioneering this and will later give the benefits of her developments to the world at large.

First Survey in 1919.

Fur farming, which embraces the domestic rearing of miscellaneous fur-bearing animals, is a new industry which in even its most infant years has shown quite a remarkable growth. In 1919, when the Federal Government decided that a sufficiently sound basis had been laid to warrant official recognition, its first survey disclosed its most infant of some 419 establishments in the Dominion devoted to the rearing of fur-bearing animals in captivity. The great majority were fox farms in Prince Edward Island. In 1920 there were 582; in 1921, 821; in 1922, 1,009; in 1923, 1,240, and at the end of 1924, 1,550. The latter figure represents very inadequately the situation at the present time since returns were not procurable from two of the branches which have shown the greatest expansion recently.

The broad, miscellaneous aspect is, without doubt, the most interesting and significant phase of wild fur-bearer domestication at the present time, both in its foreshadowing of a great future Canadian industry and the drastic change it may bring about in the provision of raw fur supply in other countries. Whilst fox farming in Canada last year recorded a healthy, normal expansion, that of the breeding of other fur-bearers practically doubled in importance, despite the omission in statistics of two of the most important branches. Experimentation is proceeding apace and each annual report of the Government sees at least one new member of the continent's fauna successfully domesticated or some exotic fur-bearer added to the Canadian list. This now comprises, in addition to silver, cross, red, blue and white foxes, raccoon, mink, skunk, marten, fisher, lynx, coyote, karakul, sheep, beaver, muskrat, Siberian hare, chinchilla rabbit, and other commercial rabbits. Among other animals under experimentation at the present time is the otter.

Revenue From Industry.

Attention naturally turned from foxes to other fur-bearers whose pelts are in most consistent demand, and the production of which promised the greatest profit. The possible revenue from fur farming can be estimated from some of the prices prevailing at the last Canadian Fur Auction. Fisher brought as high as $96; otter up to $48; marten up to $46; beaver up to $40; mink up to $21; skunk up to $3.00, and muskrat up to $2.00. Despite the apparent low price of muskrat the raising of these animals can be made one of the most profitable branches of fur farming as the little animal can be raised cheaply on a considerable scale, and it is one attracting great interest at the present time.

It has been consistently found that animals raised on fur farms attain to a greater size and develop thicker, richer pelts than when running in their wild state. This is, after all, natural in a consideration that, in addition to the process of natural selection followed and the improvement through breeding, the fur-bearers are not subjected to the vicissitudes and hazards of the wilds. The fur farmer, therefore, on the average receives more per pelt than does the trapper, an advantage in addition to those of living on a comfortable homestead with all the amenities of civilization as compared with the lonely, arduous life of the trapper.

GARNET OTTAWA WHEAT AROUSES GREAT INTEREST

Prairie Farmers Flood Government Experimental Stations With Applications.

113 DAYS TO MATURE

Should Remember That Marquis is Accepted as Milling Wheat Standard.

CALGARY, Alta., January 6. Canadian Press. — The satisfactory results of tests to which Garnet wheat has been subjected, has aroused keen interest throughout Western Canada. Garnet Ottawa 652 is the latest variety of wheat developed at Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa.

According to reports, prairie farmers anxious to try out the new wheat are flooding the government experimental station serving their respective districts, with applications for test seed. Although preliminary milling and baking tests have been made more general tests will be conducted before the seed is released for general distribution. A limited quantity of seed has been sent to a number of the experimental stations, which, however, has failed to meet the demand.

Giving details of the development of Garnet wheat, G. E. DeLong, B.S. A., assistant superintendent of the Dominion Expcrimental Farm, Lacombe, Alta., states that the new wheat has been grown at the Alberta station since 1919. During that period, he says, it required an average of 113 days to mature, while the average for Marquis wheat was 123 days. In further comparing these two varieties, Marquis gave an average yield of 46 bushels, 7 lbs. an acre, against 45 bushels, 17 lbs. an acre for Garnet Ottawa 652.

Continuing, Mr. De Long says:

"Garnet Ottawa is somewhat similar to Baby Ottawa 623, in length and strength of straw. Garnet straw also shows a tendency to develop the ruby coloration, distinctive of Ruby. The shape of its head gives a standing crop the appearance of being a very heavy yielder.

"Garnet appears to be about midway between Marquis and Ruby in tendency to shatter if allowed to become too mature before harvesting.

"The experimental station at Lacombe has never had Garnet Ottawa 652 subjected to frost during the six years it has been grown. For this reason no definite information is available concerning the frost resistance of this variety as compared with the others."

In the opinion of Mr. De Long Garnet Ottawa has a place in Central Alberta and other districts where Marquis is subject to injury from early fall frosts. Whether advancing the harvest one week in districts where Marquis is not menaced by rust or early frost would justify growing Garnet in preference to Marquis, has not been demonstrated.

"Those farming in such districts should keep in mind that Marquis is accepted as the standard milling wheat throughout Canada and the United States,' Mr. De Long advises.

"They should also remember that Garnet is a new variety and has yet to prove its worth under varying conditions to the same extent Marquis has.

"There is little doubt Garnet Ottawa 652 will replace Ruby Ottawa 623. These two wheats mature in approximately the same time but Garnet will out-yield Ruby by several bushels per acre and does not shatter to the same extent.'

PETERBOROUGH NOW KNOWN AS WINTER RESORT

Young Man From Indiana Spent His Vacation Here.

AT WINTER SPORTS.

Left For Home Pleased With Sports and Hospitality.

That Peterboro is on the road to becoming a winter resort for Americans, as well as in the summer, was evinced by a letter received by the secretary of the local Chamber of Commerce from S. W. Hayes, a leading manufacturer in Richmond, Indiana, on behalf of his son, Bryce E. Hayes, a student at Oberlin College, Northern Ohio. The letter enquired as to the possibilities of skiing and kindred sports in this district. Apparently the return letter had results as the young man left the city yesterday afternoon after having spent his vacation here. He expressed himself as being very favorably impressed with the district as a winter resort and was particularly pleased with the hospitality shown to him by the different people with whom he was brought into contact during his stay. He stated that the letter of the Chamber of Commerce had put Peterboro permanently on the map for him.

MERCHANTS FAVOR FLAGS ON STREETS

Desire That They Be Placed in Uniform Manner.

A meeting of the down-town merchants was held in the Council chamber of the Chamber of Commerce this morning. R. J. Kidd, of Robert Neill, Limited, acted as chairman in the absence of Thomas Barrie, who was ill and unable to attend. Major G. G. Winterbottom, president of the local branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, was present and explained the project which his association had in mind regarding the placing of flags on the main streets of the city. The merchants present expressed themselves as being in sympathy with the idea, but desired that the flags be placed in a uniform manner.

FOUR CHILDREN LOST LIVES IN BURNING HOUSE

Girl, 15, Lost Her Life Trying to Save Little Brothers.

FIVE ESCAPED.

Explosion of Coal Oil Lamp Caused Tragedy at Listowel.

LISTOWEL, Ont., Jan. 6.—(Canadian Press.)— Four children of Mr. and Mrs. William Sharp, ranging in age from three to fifteen years, lost their lives this morning when fire destroyed their home on the outskirts of this town, caused through the explosion of a lamp. The fire, fanned by a high wind, soon enveloped the house.

Five children made their escape, but Neil, aged 3, James, aged 4, George, aged 9, and Emily, aged 15, perished in the flames.

Emily lost her life in an heroic attempt to save the lives of her little brothers. She was in the barn when the fire broke out, and dashing into the house, endeavoured to pull the little ones to safety. Mrs. Sharp was removed to Listowel Memorial Hospital in a serious condition.

Rising at six o'clock Mrs. Sharp lighted a lamp which immediately exploded, badly burning her. Her husband went to her assistance and in the meantime the blaze, fanned by the high wind, spread through the house. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp managed to get out of the house and the five surviving children escaped in night attire. Mr. Sharp had both feet frozen. The house was totally destroyed.

NEW DECORATIONS.

Peterborough G.W.V.A. Has Union Jacks For Street Use.

The Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association have secured a quantity of Union Jacks similar to those in use in Toronto, Hamilton, Oshawa and other cities in the Dominion. The executive of the local branch has secured permission from the City Council to erect these flags on the sidewalks, and has already sold a number to local merchants. The Executive expressed the opinion that those purchasing these flags would be performing a public service as in addition to giving men work in erecting them they would be helping the City to present a loyal appearance as well as a uniform system of decoration on holidays of national importance.

WEIGHT GIVING VISITORS EDGE

Homesters Put Up Game Battle Against Larger Opponents.

ICE WAS SOFT.

Neither Team Was Able To Show Much Combination, Though Both Tried.

Superior weight and experience enabled Markham's fast Junior team to beat Peterborough Juniors 5 to 3 on soft ice in the Brock Street Rink last night. The visitors outweighed the Peterborough lads and were better able to stand the heavy going. They took the lead in the second, after the first period had ended with the score 1 all, and were able to stave off the desperate attacks of the locals and hold their two-goal lead to the end.

There wasn't a small man on the visiting lineup, and in addition to their size they could skate and handle their sticks well. The Petes were considerably smaller, but showed good stick-handling ability and plenty of speed, and tried hard right to the end.

Both teams had most of their success from individual rushes or from skirmishes around the nets. They both displayed, or attempted to display, good combination, but the ice was sticky and the majority of the passes rolled or hopped away from the waiting sticks. Both teams also missed perfect passes right in front of the nets. On hard ice the game would have been a treat, with both teams displaying good stick-handling, fast skating and nice combination.

Both Goalers Good.

Cowie, the visiting goalie, had a slight edge on Mein, turning aside shot after shot, especially in the last period. Both custodians, however, made a lot of fine shots, and both looked bad on long ones which got by. The visitor was given better protection, Stephenson and Underwood showing little inclination to be drawn out, and presenting a stone-front off which many a Peterborough attack bounced. They took care of many of the long shots, too, knocking them down for a good start on a raid on the local goal. At the other end, LeBarr and Woods played a nice offensive game, contributing some pretty rushes, but were caught out of place a number of times by the lightning rushes of their opponents.

Weight was evident on the forward line. Although the no body-checking rule gave the smaller players a better showing, they were unable to stand the heavy going as well as their bigger opponents. The Peterborough boys all showed a good turn of speed, and played their positions well, with Kennealey and Cripps the stars. They all back-checked well on the defence, and played unselfish hockey when on the attack, going down two and three abreast every time. Their opponents showed speed, but were inclined to loaf offside, and were checked up a number of times just when good rushes were started. They also drew down two penalties for persistent loafing. Crosby and Mason were the pick of the five.

Markham Score First.

The game started off with a bang, play going from end to end. Both sides relied a lot on individual attacks, evidently feeling the others out, but they soon settled down to play a little combination. Finally, with the period nearly half over, Underwood broke fast ahead of the Peterborough forwards, who were attacking, fooled the defence, and went in on Mein to score the first goal of the game. The home team then swarmed round the visiting net like angry bees, seeking to obtain the equalizer, and after they had missed a few good chances, finally succeeding on a nice shot from Kennealey's stick on a pass across the net. The period ended with Wood in the penalty box for a trip. Other penalties given in the period were one to Crosby for tripping, one to Stephenson for trying to shove an opposing forward through the side of the rink, and one to Kennealey for a trip.

Play had just nicely been renewed when Underwood put his team ahead, giving them a lead which they never lost. He repeated his feat of the first period, making a lone rush after breaking through the Petes' forwards, and going right in on Mein. On the face-off the Petes went down and Stephenson secured. He shot through the defence from the blue line, and coming in fast, banged the puck past Mein on the rebound. Eight minutes of end-to-end play, with the homesters doing most of the attacking, passed before the next counter was registered. Ted LeBarr was the sharpshooter, sending in a bullet-like drive from the blue line. Cowie kicked at the puck but missed, and looked bad on the play, although the wicked low shot gave him little chance. Shortly before the period ended, Mason raised the lead to two again on a shot from a mixup in front of the nets. Penalties during the period, which ended without further scoring, went to LeBarr, who was benched following a mixup in a corner, Underwood for tripping, and Mason for persistently loafing offside.

Petes Score Last.

Each team scored once in the final session. The visitors scored first, about five minutes after the period started, when Stephenson got in a long shot. This was scored while Mason was serving his second penalty, a two minute one this time, for loafing. Three goals down, the Petes attacked in force, keeping the visitors bottled up in their own end of the rink. Cripps went behind the net from a tussle in the corner, and swung the puck in back of Cowie for the final goal of the game. All hands continued on the attack, and only fast skating headed off visiting attacks when the defenders managed to break through. Near the end of the game Thirnbeck stopped one of Woods' fast drives with the back of his head, and was temporarily knocked out. While his teammates gathered round, Crosby picked up the puck which bounced back toward the Peterborough goal, and went in and scored, but Referee Rowden called the play back. The final gong sounded shortly after. During the period, besides Mason's penalty, terms were served by E. Clendenning (two minutes for tripping, Wood (one minute for a bodycheck), Sephenson (a minute for a trip), and by M. Clendenning (a minute for charging Mein). The summary:

THRILLING GAME IN H.C. LEAGUE

Stirling Beat Madoc 2-1 in Ten Minutes' Overtime.

EVENLY MATCHED

STIRLING, Jan. 6.—Talk about hockey! Those who failed to attend the first game of the season by teams of the Hastings County association played here Monday night when Madoc beat Stirling, 2 to 1, certainly missed seeing the greatest game ever played here. The great interest and appreciation of the public was shown by the large crowd in attendance.

The line up of the teams follow:

Referee—C. Brown, Tweed.

Goal umpires—E. Smith, Madoc; H. Tulloch, Stirling.

The first goal was won for Stirling by Jack Ackers putting the puck past the Madoc goal keeper in less than ten minutes after the game started. The teams were pretty evenly matched as to speed and the checking of their opponents, and they kept up an active skirmish first at one end of the rink and then the other until the end of the first period without either one scoring again. After the rest the battle was resumed and in about five minutes, Madoc secured a goal to their credit. Left Wing J. Watson was the man to score this goal. The active onslaught of the rival teams upon each other's goals continued until the end of the second period without any success in scoring. Another rest of ten minutes and the third and last period began, with greater activity and better playing by both sides. But with all the energy that either, seemingly could put forth, the goals were impregnable against placing the puck there, and the result at this stage was a tie.

In order to break the tie overtime was necessary. Now the battle of the night began and it was like the "Charge of the Light Brigade" at Balaklava the way they went at it, first around one goal then the other. The bell rung, first five minutes was ended and no score. The goal-keeers changed ends and the lay had barely began again when right defense W. J. Whitty landed the puck past the Madoc goal-keeper. The play was continued until time was up without any further scoring, so the game ended with a score of 2 to 1 in favor of the home team.

Neither team need be ashamed of its playing in any respect as each player seemed to act the part of a gentleman towards his opponent, no rough play being indulged in by either side. Several casualties of a minor nature occurred.

Howard Shanks, the veteran infielder who has been given his unconditional release by the New York American League club, has been fourteen years in the major leagues, eleven of them as a member of the Washington Senators.

January Thaw Thwarts Plan of Scugog Club For Big Tourney.

TUESDAY SCORES.

John Carew Offers Another Trophy For Bonspiel in February.

LINDSAY, Jan. 6.—Lindsay Curling Club bumped up against a January thaw in planning its open bonspiel for the first week in the month, with the result that a great many outside clubs withdrew their entries. The committee decided at noon Tuesday to place the Victoria Trust and Savings Cup up for competition with the individual prizes as well as create a consolation event for first and second prizes.

Later in February, the club will stage a big open bonspiel, with three competitions, as John Carew has announced that he will put up a trophy.

There are nineteen Lindsay rinks in the 'spiel, with rinks from Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Lakeviews, Toronto, Claremont; Dunsford and Midland. Ray Best, of Peterboro, has entered a rink composed of the following: George Hall, Geo. Cairns, J. N. Bacon, Ray Best.

Chairman's Welcome.

Chairman "Larry" O'Connor stated that the committee earnestly hoped for good weather conditions, and expected many entries from out of town. The bonspiel was in the main staged out of memory and respect for the late lamented dean of curlers in Canada, J. D. Flavelle.

The chairman took occasion to extend hearty welcome to the outside rinks present. "Now that you are here, we are going to let you play. We are not going to send you away without a game.

"We have tried to work the bonspiel out for the pleasure of outside rinks, primarily, and with some consideration for the local rinks as well."

Peter Smith, of Hamilton, who figured prominently in the bonspiel of 1914, wrote Secretary Matthie, expressing his deep regrets at being unable to be present, even as a visitor, owing to poor health. Mr. Smith is well and favorably known by curlers in Lindsay.

A letter was received from the Lakefield Curling Club, entering a rink skipped by J. J. Moore, the hero of many a hard fought curling game.

Jack Smith, a noted boxing promoter of Manchester, England, was sadly disappointed at having no son to whom he could look to relieve him of some of his work, but he has found an able substitute in his daughter. More than once Miss Smith has made the matches and arranged all the details for a big boxing tournament at her father's club.

HER REIGN UNSHAKEN.

If Bobby Jones as the season's best golf amateur in 1925 has the distinction of three consecutive years' ranks as No. 1, Miss Glenna Collett can go him one better, for she now heads the list of best 10 women for the fourth year in succession, and in no year has her claim to the premier position been more clearly established than in this, for in addition to winning the U. S. title she carried off first honors in the French championship, the Florida and Florida East Coast championships and in the Shenecossett and Indian Hill tournaments.

DOG DERBY COURSE WILL BE LONGEST

Five Famous Mushers Have Entered Contest For the Strongheart Trophy.

BANFF, Ala., Jan. 6—(By Canadian Press).—A world championship dog derby to the "top of the world and back," will be run for the first time in the history of dog mushing at the Banff winter carnival this year. This course, from Calgary to the Great Divide and back to Banff will be the longest dog race ever staged, according to records, and will exceed The Pas derby by 23 miles. The Strongheart trophy and $1,000 in cash will go to the winners.

From Calgary, the dog teams will travel to a height of 5,300 feet over a distance of 133 miles. The contestants will then return to Banff via Lake Louise, completing the distance of 173 miles. The course lies over the most rugged scenery in North America and will be the most unique ever made by a dog team.

The championship dog derby will be made an annual event at the Banff winter carnival.

Among the mushers who have already entered for the race are Ike Mills, with his team of famous all-blacks; Harry Knight, the 19-year-old boy, who has captured the Strongheart trophy twice and needs a third victory for its permanent possession; Jim Boyce, Fred Pepper, George Child and others.

The end of the race will be celebrated by a buffalo barbeque at Lake Minnewanka, seven miles from Banff.

Another feature of the carnival which will be staged from February 5-11 inclusive, will be the ski-jumping contests over the new and enlarged hill. Among those who will participate will be Nels Nelson, who holds the world's championship in both the amateur and professional classes.

HOCKEY WINNING NEW YORK FANS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press)—The possible success that hockey is to enjoy in its recently adopted New York home will, if the predictions of W. McGurk, prominent newspaper cartoonist, come true, attain the dizzy heights reached by "Red" Grange, phenomenal footballer and erstwhile ice deliveryman. "Another iceman that made good," is the way McGurk in Tuesday's New York American captioned hockey's introduction to Gotham's sporting public.

The cartoonist depicted New York as a dainty flapper casting fond glances from the side boards of a rink in the direction of a hockey player as he glided along ice on his blades, "What a popular skate this baby has turned out to be," says McGurk.

CANADIENS CLIMB INTO THIRD PLACE

Win Over St. Pats Last Night Pulled Them Up.

MONTREAL, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Canadiens jumped into first division berth in the National Hockey League race here last night as the result of their 5 to 4 victory over Toronto St. Pats. The win sent the Canadiens into third place, six points behind the maroon team and eight points behind the league leaders, Ottawa Senators. It was Canadiens' ability to fight back which brought them victory last night.

DE LAVAL TEAM WON IN OMEMEE

Score Was 4-3 in First Hockey of the Season.

CRAFTON A STAR.

OMEMEE, Jan. 6. — The local hockey season was officially opened on Saturday night when De Laval of Peterboro clashed with the homesters. The visitors emerged on the long end of a 4-3 score. The game was not a brilliant exhibition, but sound hockey was played by both teams, and at times clever individual plays brought the fans to a high point of excitement.

The visitors' defence pair were in good form and forced the locals to do most of their shooting from the red line. Omemee was the first to score. It was the result of a clever piece of combination by the forward line and the accurate shot of Johnny Crafton, who stood out as the "Colts" star.

De Laval had three substitutes, who were used frequently, whereas the "Colts" had but one regular sub., they being handicapped by the absence of C. Mackey. Faulkner was substituted for Mackey, and made a fair showing. Sam. Clemett, in centre for the locals, was just as good as ever.

As it was the first game of the season, the "Colts" did not show up as good as they are capable of doing, but, however, before long they will hit their stride and, then watch out. For the visitors, every man played good clean hockey. They are a fast bunch of boys and will make things interesting for their opponents in the City League.

H. Lucas, of Montreal, was the capable referee.

BRUINS SHUT OUT PIRATES 3 TO 0

Cleanest Game of Season—Boston Shows Surprising Form.

STRONG DEFENCE.

BOSTON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Pittsburgh's losing streak continued last night and the Pirates were shut out in a National Hockey League game by Boston Bruins, 3 to 0. It was the cleanest game of the season here, only one penalty beinng imposed. The Bruins, after a week's rest, showed a form that surprised their partisans. An impregnable defence broke up all the Pirates' rallies and in front of this wall an attack new in the history of the Boston team worked constantly on the Pittsburgh goal.

SENATORS WIN SHUT-OUT GAME

Defeat Their Closer Rivals, Montreal Maroons, 4-0, at Ottawa.

HOCKEY CLASSIC.

OTTAWA, January 6. — Canadian Press. — The Ottawa Senators retained possession of the top rung of the N.H.L. ladder, when they humbled the Montreal Maroons here last night, the final score being 4-0 for the locals.

A crowd, which the rink officials estimated to be in the neighborhood of 9,000, crowded into the auditorium to see the teams battle. For a period and a half it was a hockey classic. Both teams waded right in with might and main, and in between the heavy parts, with which the engagement was studded, some really brilliant hockey was shown.

SCORELESS TIE IN SENIOR GAME

Galt and Preston Battle 90 Minutes on Soft Ice.

GRUELLING STRUGGLE.

GALT, January 6. — Canadian Press. — The long looked for clash between Preston Riversides and the Terriers came last night when before a capacity crowd (the largest that has been in the local arena in years) the two teams battled ninety minutes on heavy ice without a score. It was a gruelling struggle on water soaked ice which made good hockey impossible.

HOYT MENTIONED IN BASEBALL DEAL

Yanks, Browns and Senators Reported Trading.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press) — Reports that a three-cornered player deal is pending among the New York Yankees, St. Louis Browns and Washington Senators, were given credence Tuesday in baseball circles despite a statement by Colonel Jacob Ruppert, Yankee owner, that he knew nothing about such negotiations.

According to these reports, the Yankees are slated to obtain Marty McManus, hard-hitting St. Louis infielder, in exchange for Spencer Adams, infielder, and Tom Zachary, southpaw pitcher, who would first come to New York from Washington for Waite Hoyt, right-handed pitcher.

Aaron Ward, second-baseman of the Yankees for the past few years, also may go to St. Louis when the negotiations, said to be well under way, are completed.

GAMES POSTPONED.

City Hockey League Fixture Will Be Played Next Wednesday.

The games scheduled for tonight by the City Hockey League have been postponed until next Wednesday because of poor ice.

WARDENSHIP OF UNITED COUNTIES MAIN TOPIC NOW

Politics Plays a Large Part in Election of Presiding Officer.

FIVE IN FIELD.

Three Are Conservatives and Two Liberals—Slade Only Liberal Warden.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 6—Talking of politics in the Counties Council of Northumberland and Durham and the part it plays in the election of a Warden, that is the main topic of conversation here at present. The various municipal elections in the two counties on Monday excited fully as much interest as the recent Federal contests and it is safe to say that the former elections furnished more surprises than did the others, so many reeves and deputies being defeated at the polls.

In the Council of 1925 there were 23 Conservatives and 17 Liberals and for the first time in years the party representation is about equally divided although a Campbellford statistician figures that the Liberals have a majority of two. If this is the case it is the first time that such a condition has prevailed since the two counties were united for municipal purposes)

It is impossible to make an accurate statement with regard to the relative standing of the two political parties as all the returns are not in from Durham County and the political affiliations of some of the new reeves and deputies are matters of speculation. It is known, however, that the Liberals have gained three in Northumberland, one each in Cobourg, in Murray and in Haldimand.

At least to leading candidates for the wardenship were defeated at the oplls on Monday, Reeves Elliott of Murray and Haig of Haldimand. This leaves in the field, according to the announced intentions of each, Reeves Davidson of Campbellford, McCubbin of Percy, Clarke of Cramahe, Anderson of South Monaghan and Bedal of Brighton Township. Of these Reeves McCubbin and Clarke are Liberals. It was rumored here yesterday that Reeve Clarke had decided to withdraw from the race and if this is case Reeve McCubbin would be left to carry the Liberal standard alone. All the others are in the field and have already started their campaign.

The Liberals elected a warden in 1918 when F. J. Slade of Haldimand was chosen for that position. If any other man of that political faith was ever elected warden then the records of the transaction, so far as the memory of the living is concerned, have been lost.

The Council this year when it comes to choose a warden is likely to adhere more closely than ever to party lines.

HARRIS TO KEEP SAME OLD CLUB

After Third Pennant With String of Veteran Players.

SAME INFIELD.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6 — Substantially the same team that won the American League pennant last season again will take the field for the Washington Americans this year.

Aside from the possible retirement of infielder Everett Scott and Allan Russell, relief pitcher, and the possibility of the trading of outfielders Leibold and Veach, no changes have been forecast.

Manager Stanley Harris, two years manager, with two league pennants and a World Series victory to his credit, intends to keep his infield intact along with his 1925 catching staff, but he would like to have a capable outfielder to work between Goslin and Rice.

Same Combination

The infield combination of Judge, Harris, Peckinpaugh and Bluege, which for two successive seasons has excelled all others in double plays, will start the season. Buddy Myer, youthful infielder otbained from New Orleans, is slated to be Peck's understudy.

Indications are that Johnson, Coveleskie and Ruether, who, together, won 56 games last season, will form the backbone of the pitching staff again.

Marberry, relief hurler, who participated in 55 contests last season, although he made no starts, again is destined for the rescue assignment.

Harris wants one more experienced pitcher, He has looked with covetous eyes upon Hoyt, of the Yankees; Ehmke, of the Red Sox, and Bush, of the Browns. Alex. Ferguson is expected to qualify for a regular pitching assignment, while Lefty Thomas, Harry Kelly and Win Ballou, Southern Association recruits, are likely prospects.

Chance for Jeanes

Tex Jeanes, erstwhile Southern Association gardener, is the most likely candidate for the third outfield assignment, but Veach and Leibold, if they remain on the roster, will receive consideration.

It is probable that Joe Harris will be retained as relief man for Judge at first base. Shirley and McGee, recruits, will receive tryouts at the post. Myer and Stuffy Stewart, another Southern Association product, complete the list of infield reserves.

The catching staff with Ruel getting first call and Severeid and Tate his assistants, remain the same.

There will be snake dances, twisted caps and smiling faces in the American League this year. Nick Altrock has signed his contract to coach the Senators.

Petes Out For Win in First Home O.H.A. Start of Season.

The Petes play their first home O.H.A. game of the season at the Brock street rink Friday night with the fast young Toronto Canoe Club team of Toronto furnishing the opposition. The prospects for colder weather and fast ice are welcomed by both players and fans alike, good ice conditions being all that is necessary to ensure a spectacular battle. Although the Paddlers were beaten by Osgoode Hall last night, they showed plenty of stuff and with their speed and hard checking will give the Petes a merry battle for the honours on Friday night. They have a rattling good goal minder in Joe Starke and some fine prospects in Johnny McPherson, Foster, Taylor and Grant. McPherson, one of the stars of last years champion Aura Lee Juniors should go great guns on the local ice.

The game is called for 8.30 o'clock, and will be in charge of M. J. Rodden of Toronto.

The reserved seat plan is on sale at Bert McLeod's drug store.

MASQUERADE PARTY.

Woman's Friendly Bible Class of St. John's Had Enjoyable Time.

The Women's Friendly Bible Class of St. John's Church held a very jolly masquerade party in the parish hall last evening, with an attendance of over one hundred people, the majority being in costume. Prizes were awarded to Miss Jessie Patterson, the best-dressed lady, and to Mr. Sherman Preston, for impersonation of a female character, to Mrs. J. Bacon and Mr. F. A. Dainton, for comic outfits, and special mention, with a prize, was made of the comic costume worn by Mrs. Shannon. Judges of costumes were Rev. R. C. Blagrave, D.D., Mrs. A. W. Turner, Mayor-elect Dr. Holloway and Mrs. Holloway, and Mrs. F. M. Delafosse. A couple of tables of cards were played by gentlemen who did not take part in the dance which occupied the attention of the majority of the masqueraders for the evening, followed by light refreshments. Bert Budd's Bluebird orchestra provided excellent music. Mrs. J. Bacon acted as general convenor of arrangements.

GRIEVING FOR WIFE CAUSE OF SUICIDE

Aged Toronto Man Shot Himself—Wife Dead Four Weeks.

TORONTO, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Stricken with grief over the death, four weeks ago, of his wife, Edgar E. Birchard, aged 70, was last night found dead with a bullet wound in his head at his home.

It was four weeks ago that Birchard, on returning to his home from work, entered the kitchen of the house and found his wife dead from gas poisoning.

TRAVELS INCOGNITO

The Duke of Leinster, "hereditary king of Ireland," known on both sides of the Atlantic for his many sporting adventures including one of racing an automobile from Aberdeen to London in fourteen and one-half hours, beating the train time and winning a wager of 600 pounds, has arrived in America under the incognito of "E. Fitzgerald."

MISS ROSE HURT IN TRAIN WRECK

Wolfville to Acadia University. She was seated in the Pullman when the car plunged over, and was apparently struck on the head, and pinned beneath the wreckage, from which she was rescued with great difficulty.

Edgar Fortier, Toronto, a passenger, was thrown through a window, and landed in a snow bank some 40 feet away. Recovering he saw Miss Rose amongst the wreckage and went to her assistance, but fainted before he could reach her.

Ross, the conductor, was also pinned beneath the car, and was in serious both were finally rescued, and first aid was applied, and upon arrival of physicians, were rushed with Green, the other seriously injured passenger, to Springhill, where they are being looked after at All Saints' Hospital.

Found Miss Rose.

HALIFAX. — Edgar Fortier, a commercial traveller of Toronto, who was a passenger on the Maritime express wrecked near Amherst yesterday, told of his experience on his arrival here. Mr. Fortier had been in the act of leaving the smoking compartment of the Pullman car when the crash came.

He felt the car beginning to careen and tried to steady himself. Next he remembered, he was lying in a snowbank by the side of the track, and the Pullman was a wreck. The engine and several other cars were half a mile away. Mr. Fortier was covered with blood but apparently not seriously injured. He saw a woman lying partly under a wrecked car and started to her assistance, but fainted before reaching her. The woman was Miss Evelyn Rose, daughter of Rev. Dr. C. W. Rose of Peterborough, Ont., and was one of the most seriously injured.

Mr. Fortier believed he was thrown through the window but has no memory of how he reached the snowbank. His injuries were painful but not dangerous. Three accident victims at the Cottage Hospital, Springhill, were reported resting comfortably today.

Condition Serious.

HALIFAX, Jan. 6 (Special by Canadian Press).—The condition of Miss Evelyn Rose, of Peterboro, Ont., who was injured yesterday afternoon when the Halifax-bound maritime express was wrecked at Salt Springs, near Springhill Junction, on the main line of the Canadian National Railway, was reported from All Saints' Hospital at Springhill, this morning, as being still serious. Miss Rose sustained possible internal injuries as well as a blow on the head and severe shock. The other two casualties taken to Springhill Hospital, W. J. Ross of Halifax, car conductor, and George L. Green, a passenger, of Sandy Point, N.S., were reported as being in a favorable condition. Conductor Ross was badly cut on the lip, head and arms. Mr. Green had two ribs broken, was slightly cut and suffered hip injury.

Miss Marguerite Crocker, of Millerton, N.B., who was taken to a Truro hospital, suffering from cuts on her head and back, was, according to word received from Truro this morning, resting well. The remainder of the twenty persons injured in the wreck were, it is thought, suffering no serious effects from their wounds, which were for the most part minor shocks and cuts.

The track in the vicinity of Salt Springs, which had been torn up for two hundred feet by the wreck, was repaired last night, and the train service this morning was being operated on schedule.

SECOND VICTIM.

Bootleggers' War Opens in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Jan. 6. — Stanley Opian, 29, was waylaid and shot to death at Depew early yesterday, the second victim of a vendetta or bootleggers' war within 24 hours.

Opian, with his nine-year-old son, was leaving the home of a friend when he was fired upon. The assassins escaped.

It was the second attempt on Opian's life. On Sunday night, while he was attending a dance, a percussion cap was placed in the gasoline tank of his automobile and wired to the ignition system. Opian noticed the extra wiring and disconnected it.

POULTRY SHOW HAS 900 BIRDS

Toronto, Cornish; Torrance Weir of Agincour, Black Minorcas and other varieties; J. Patterson of Agincourt, water fowl and Leghorns, Dorkins and Sussex.

Large local exhibitors are Elric White, H. Lush, Earl Moncrief, Robert Bugg, Percy Hartley, George Buller, Ken Thropp, V. Tully; and District men showing birds include Frank Head of South Monaghan, G. A. Bendelow of Ida, Clayton Sanderson and Morgan Brown of Smith, Bell and Carpenter of Otonabee, Robert Tully of Smith, and George Trotter, R.R. No. 4.

Fine Barred Rocks.

There is a display of Barred Rocks at this year's show that equals in point of numbers of entries and in quality of birds anythings shown at big metropolitan exhibitions. There are 83 birds in this class, including 20 male, 19 hens, 22 cockerels and 22 pullets. The extremely cold weather of a fortnight ago caused a certain amount of frosting among the birds, but the majority are in fine conditions.

Blue Andalusians are another big class, and show some beautiful birds with fine markings. Nearly 50 birds are in this class. Brown Leghorns, light and dark, have another large representation, and White Leghorns, with their pure white bodies and graceful stream lines, number about 30 birds. There is a good variety of Anconas, White Wyandottes, and Rhode Island Reds, the latter a large exhibit. Cornish birds to the number of about 25 are on view, and there is an interesting showing of the enormous Jersey Black Giants, with their fierce appearance. Other classes include Dorkins, White Orpingtons, Black Hamburgs, Redcaps, Houdans with their fuzzy crests, the odd-looking white-crested Black Polish, the silver and golden spangled Hamburgs, and the pencilled silver variety, dainty little fowl these, golden and silver Campines, Buff Leghorns and Orpingtons, Black Minorcas, and Dark Brahmas, with their heavy neck ruffs; Cochins, white and buff and partridge Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes in all their varieties, and Black Langshans.

Breeding pens show some fine birds. G. P. Randle of Toronto has a particularly good quartette of Cornish, and there are White Rocks, White Wyandottes, Barred Rocks and Columbian Wyandottes on view here also.

The Bantams are an interesting exhibit, and include a number of the Birchen Game variety, a single fawn-colored specimen of the Pyle Game, a quintette of neat little duck wings, Seabrights, rose combs, black, white and buff Cochins, a lone white silky and half a dozen Brahmas, cunning little miniatures of their much-feathered larger brethren.

The Pigeons on view contain some very fine specimens, including one of Chief Newhall's thousand-mile birds. With their throaty, crooning notes, they look out at spectators with colored heads, in all the pretty shades of green and purple, fawn and white, grey and green. There are a couple of dozen homers here, and a couple of ruffled Jacobins. Chief Newhall and George Buller have the pigeons.

Mr. Hutchinson of Warkworth shows a half dozen peaceful bunnies, with spotless white backs and pink ears.

Water Fowl.

The Water Fowl and Turkeys have an excellent showing. The lordly Canada goose that Jack Miner raves about is here in all his dignified pride; the White Chinese, the big Africans with their pale brown breasts, the White Emdens, the Toulouse. In the coops against the west wall are the turkeys, big gobblers with pale blue and carmine wattles, in all the glory of their bronze hues, and White Hollands, with their drooping tail feathers. Ducks carrying on a lively conversation and eyeing passers-by with their greedy eyes, are in the side coops also, big Muscovas with warty noses, and, in smaller cages, Pekins and Rouens, pale colored Aylesburys and White Indian Runners, and a couple of birds with round, tiara-like crests on their white heads.

A dozen Guinea Fowl with pepper and salt coats are next door to the sleep little rabbits, hard by the coops containing a good display of Black Leghorns and a dozen of the Pitt Game fowl, disarming paper partitions between their wire homes.

In connection with the Show are several interesting demonstrations. A great deal of educational value to poultrymen and the general public is attached to the demonstration of egg candling in charge of a Governmental expert and there is a very fine exhibit of poultry houses and coops and colored slides depicting various phases of farm industry conducted by the Dominion Experimental Farms. Here is the pendant coop for the broody hen that teeters constantly and prevents the bird from having her own way. A demonstration of the proper methods of killing and gleeding fowls is being carried on every afternoon and evening during the three days of the show by an expert in the work. A big White Rock, her craw filled with grain, was the first victim last night. Mr. F. H. Dawson is also showing a variety of mashes and feeds.

Mrs. R. Bugg is continuing her good service for the poultrymen and their patrons by maintaing a light refreshment stand at the east entrance, which, by the way, is closed. Intending visitors to the Show are advised to take the Murray Street entrance.

Another interesting item on view is an exhibition coop which is sixty years old. Its maker, father of Mr. Alex. Patterson, has been dead for 53 years, but the coop, which now belongs to Mr. Elric White, is in apparently very fine condition.

In connection with the Show, every patron has a chance of winning a first prize of a pen of Barred Rocks, donated by Chief S. Newhall, or a second award of a ham or side of bacon, given by the New Centre Meat Market, by computing the number of beans in a tall glass jar.

Energetic officers of the Association who are looking after the Show are Mr. J. C. Ellis, president; Mr. W. J. Nesbitt, secretary; Mr. George Paxman, treasurer and superintendent, on whom devolves the main portion of the work, and his assistant, Mr. W. Stewart.

The Show continues in full swing today and tomorrow.

TURKISH NOTE CAUSES ALARM

Turks Refuse To Negotiate on Basis of League Award.

WANT MOSUL CITY.

LONDON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Ferid Bey, Turkish ambassador to London, yesterday delivered a message from Angora to Premier Baldwin, the contents of which have caused alarm.

Turkey replies to the British suggestion for negotiations over Mosul that she will be glad to do so, but not on the basis of the League of Nations award. Angora makes clear that the town of Mosul must be Turkish.

There is said to be no possibility of any British Cabinet giving the town to Turkey after the League has awarded it to British mandated Irak.

AT THE REGENT

"BEST BAD MAN" GIVES MIX GREAT CHANCE FOR HIS DARING STUNTS.

Max Brand Story is Thrilling, Dramatic Tale—Clara Bow Plays Opposite Western Star.

Given a thrilling story and surrounded by an excellent cast, Tom Mix will open a three days run at the Regent Theatre next Thursday, when he presents the Fox film version of Max Brand's gripping narrative, "The Best Bad Man." The story was directed by J. G. Blystone from a scenario prepared by Lillian Hayward. The action opens in New Orleans but swiftly shifts to the west.

Clara Bow, playing oposite Tom Mix, experiences some of the most hazardous moments of her screen career ,but the little beauty never falters—even in the face of genuine danger when thousands of gallons of water pour over her frail body as a huge dam gives way. Other members of the cast who have hair-raising experiences are Judy King, Paul Panzer Cyril Chadwick, Tom Wilson, Frank Beal, Tom Kennedy and Buster Gardner.

AT THE CAPITOL

"SEA TRAGEDY" ONLY MOVIES THRILLER.

Atlantic Liner Passengers See Ship Blown Up for "Half Way Girl."

Seamen and passengers sailing off New York Harbour were given the thrill of their lives recently.

They saw a big steamer afire at sea; several hundred passengers scrambling frantically for the lifeboats; a fight between a man and a leopard for the possession of one of the lifeboats; and as a climax saw the big liner suddenly blow up and sink.

The vessel was the former U. S. Shipping Board Str. Corvallis. The occasion was the filming of thrilling scenes in "The Half Way Girl," Earl Hudsons latest First National production, which comes to the Capitol to-morrow, with Doris Kenyon, Lloyd Hughes and Hobart Bosworth in the featured roles.

The Corvallis was 284 feet long, displaced 4220 tons and formerly carried freight and passengers between New York and Europe. The big scene of the picture explodes when a cargo of benzine explodes in the hold of the ship and the ship goes down far out at sea.

Tugboats were stationed nearby to pick up the lifeboats and rescue the actors and actresses who were in distress as the result of this realistic bit of picture making.

In the cast with Miss Kenyon, Hughes and Bosworth are Tully Marshall, Teddy Sampson, Sam Hardy, Harriet Sterling, Sally Crute, Martha Madison, Henry West and others.

The picture was directed by John Francis Dillon.

FAMOUS 'CELLO PLAYER COMING

It is not very often that Peterborough is favored with a visit by a famous violoncellist such as will be heard at the Trinity Church Concert on Monday night next, Jan. 11, and all music lovers and those specially interested in 'cello playing will do well to hear Leo Smith of Toronto, Bachelor of Music, University of Manchester.

The following extracts from the Press show beyond doubt that for skill, technique and interpretation Leo Smith is one of the finest 'cello players in the Dominion.

The Toronto Star Weekly says: "Mr. Leo Smith revealed an exceptional beauty of tone, a fine instinct for phrasing, and charming qualities of interpretation which won for him a success which was undeniable."

The Hamilton Evening Times says: "Mr. Leo Smith possesses that fine touch so essential in 'cello playing, and on every occasion that he appears, he will make friends. Not only is an impression made by the musical strains which flow so evenly from his instrument, but his pose and manner are such as to cause the bond of sympathy between the audience and the player."

Sunday World, Toronto: "At the Belasco Theatre, New York, on December 4, Miss Margaret Huston, the Canadian Soprano, gave a programme made up of songs by Kun, Reger, Strauss, Beach, Wolf, Debussy, Viardot, Puget, and Bruneau. Miss Huston also sang "My Star," a delightful song written by Mr. Leo Smith of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra."

Toronto Daily Star: "Special mention must be made of the two songs by Mr. Leo Smith, a member of the orchestra. Mr. Smith has proved himself an exceptional artist as a 'cello player at several recitals this season, and in these songs composed by him he exhibited strong proof of his very clever musicianship. They are written in the modern style, and especially is this the case in "My Star," which is in keeping with Debussy or Max Reger. Mr. Smith played the accompaniments of his own songs."

'MORE BOBBIES' LONDON'S PLEA

Motor Cars Increase the Work of the Police.

FORCE IS SMALLER.

LONDON, Jan. 6 —That the metropolis of the world is still growing is evidenced by the appeal for more policemen. After sitting peaceably by the Thames for 1,000 years London suddenly finds itself confronted by whole groups of problems new in its experience, and with many of them it seems quite unable to cope.

The most puzzling of these problems have been brought in by the motor cars. Traffic in London streets increased in 1924 by 31 per cent. over that of 1923. The figures for the present year are not available, but they will show a substantial increase.

There are two effects of this on police work: It involves added traffic problems and increased crime. To make matters worse for the police authorities, the solution of one of these problems seems to make that of the other more difficult. When dease traffic came in, policemen were withdrawn from their beats and appointed to regulate the going and coming of peaceable citizens at street corners. Meanwhile, the criminal classes took advantage of the motor cars to multiply their depredations.

Troubles Increase.

Moreover, the automobile developed a type of law-breaking peculiar to themselves. There were 40,230 summonses for motor offenses last year, an increase of 11,246 over those of the previous year. But most serious is the fact that thieves, thugs and other criminals are developing new tactics in which the motor car figures as a ready means of escape. There have been numerous hold-ups, burglaries and jewel thefts of late in which the "high-powered" motor operated by an expert driver, has been mentioned in the police reports. Such methods are commnplace in the large cities of America, but they are regarded as an innovation in the criminal annals of London.

In consequence, insurance companies that take burglary risks are raising their rates. In some cases these increases amount to as much as 200 per cent.

Force Decreases.

The Commissioner of Police, Sir William Horwood, who is asking for enlargement of his force, calls attention to the fact that, in spite of this vast enlargement of police responsibility, the number of police in London is fewer than in 1911. In that year there were 19,8.8 members of the force, while at present the total strength is but 19,556.

That this depleted force has maintained a fair degree of efficiency is shown by the fact that more than five times as much stolen property was recovered last year as in 1911, but there was more to recover. In 1911 the total amount of property reported as stolen was less than $1,000,000. Last year the value of property reported stolen amounted to more than $3,000,000.

MR. AND MRS. KING ENTERTAINED FANS

Radio Programme Given By Former Peterborough Organist and Wife.

On New Year's night the radios in Peterboro were busy tuning in to get Station WCX, Detroit, at which station Mr. and Mrs. George H. King, organist and soloist respectively of Trinity church, this city, were giving musical numbers for broadcasting, assisted by other artists.

The following is an extract from the Detroit Free Press:

Lovely old Scotch melodies brought the year of broadcasting to a close at WCX, the Free Press Station atop the Book-Cadillac hotel, last night, when Mrs. George H. King sang "My Ain Folk." "My Laddie," and "Angus MacDonald." The group was but one of three Mrs. King sang and her lovely soprano voice brought many requests for encores. Other artists who were on the programme were Mrs. Harry H. Jackson, mezzo-soprano; John Ogg, baritone and Geo. H. Lancey, baritone. All piano accompaniments were played by George H. King, organist at Central United church, Windsor.

The last group by Mrs. King closed the programme. Earlier in the afternoon news bulletins and weather reports were broadcast.

NON-CONFIDENCE WILL BE MOVED

Conservatives Won't Vote Against Lemieux For Speaker.

AMEND SPEECH.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press)—The conference this morning between the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, and other prominent members of the party, approved an amendment to the speech from the throne calling for a vote of non-confidence in the government. The likelihood is that the amendment will be moved by the Conservative leader early next week.

Opposition to the nomination of Hon. Rodolph Lemieux as speaker of the next parliament will not be made, it is understood, by the Conservatives. The opportunity, however, will be taken by the Conservatives to inform the government that the acceptance of the nomination of Mr. Lemieux as speaker, or any formal motions, should not be taken as a vote of confidence, empowering the King government to make any appointments.

The approval of both decisions is fully expected to be given at the general Conservative caucus to be held on Friday morning.

OBITUARY.

JAMES DRURY.

NORWOOD, Jan. 6.—Mr. James Drury, Norwood's oldest resident, and probably holding the record for long connection with the Orange Order, died at his home on Queen Street, on Tuesday morning at two o'clock. Mr. Drury was born in Norwood in June, 1830, of U. E. Loyalist stock. His father came in his earlier days from Vermont, and followed his occupation as a cooper in the village of Norwood.

When the deceased was 14 years of age he joined the Norwood L.O.L. and has been a member of the Order ever since. Last summer he was made a member of Black Preceptory, and took a number of the degrees, staying at the Lodge room one evening until two o'clock in the morning.

In 1851 he was united in marriage by Rev. Mr. Carr, pastor of the Methodist Church, to Elizabeth McLaughlin, now deceased. Of this union seven children were born, four of whom are still living.

About 1871 Mr. Drury moved to Haliburton, where he engaged in his occupation as a farmer. Fourteen years ago he again married, taking as his bride Mrs. Andrew Allen, and shortly after moved to Norwood and purchased the property on Queen Street, where he died. Until recently his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated, but a couple of weeks ago he was forced to give up, and patiently awaited the call, "Come up higher."

The deceased leaves to mourn his loss, besides his wife, who is 88 years of age, two daughters and two sons, namely: Mrs. Robert Sarginson of Highland Grove, Ont.; Mrs. George Chamberlain of Goodeerham, Ont.; Mr. Willard Drury of Lindsay, and Mr. Robert Drury of Highland Grove.

The funeral, which will be under the auspices of the Orange Order, will take place on Wednesday afternoon.

WILLIAM H. McALLISTER.

PATCHOGUE, N.Y., Jan. 6 (Canadian Press). — Wm. Henry McAllister, founder of four Long Island newspapers, one time editor of the Toronto World, and manager of Grand Opera stars, died yesterday at the home of his son, Spencer Hamilton McAllister.

MRS. JOHN COLLINS.

The sad and sudden death of Mrs. John Collins occurred last evening at her home, 43 Lafayette Avenue, after a brief illness. She was taken suddenly ill last Friday morning, and the best medical aid was summoned, but of no avail. On January 5th death ended her sufferings when she quietly and peacefully passed away. The deceased was a former resident of Lindsay ,but has resided in Peterboro for several years, where she made a host of loving friends. She was deeply devoted to the Sacred Heart Church and a member of the Sacred Heart Parish. She leaves to mourn a sorrowing husband, one daughter, Florence, and an only son, Joseph, and one sister, Mrs. Wm. Ganter of Niagara Falls, who was at her bedside when she died.

The funeral will take place on Friday morning at nine o'clock from her residence to the Sacred Heart Church, thence to St. Peter's Cemetery.

ROBERT MANIECE

The death occurred yesterday morning at St. Joseph's Hospital of Robert Maniece. Mr. Maniece was a lifelong resident of Ashburnham, having been born there 71 years ago yesterday.

He is survived by his wife, one son, Gordon, and one daughter, Mrs. M. G. Hardill, both of Peterborough, one brother, Thomas of Peterborough, one sister, Mrs. A. Sedgwick of Peterborough.

The funeral will take place tomorrow at 2.00 p.m., from the family residence, 84 James Street, to Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. G. J. Bousfield of St. Luke's Church will officiate.

Wheat Prices Weak To-day Quotations Low at Liverpool

CHICAGO, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press)—Wheat prices showed weakness today, the relative strength of quotations at Liverpool having failed to bring about any aggressive buying here at the opening. Favorable weather conditions in Argentina were reported and selling on the part of leading commission houses disclosed that support for the market was poor. On the declines which ensued, a considerable number of standing orders to sell out and to stop losses at definite fixed limits were forced into operation. Opening, unchanged to 7-8c lower, new style, May 178 7-8 to 179 and July 153 1-2 to 154 was followed by something of a rally and then by a set back to 177 1-4 for May and 153 1-4 for July.

Unfavorable weather in the corn belt, together with restricted movement of the corn crop, gave firmness to corn values. Reports too were current that a reduction in the 1925 pig crop is being evened through the curtailed slaughter of hogs. After opening at 1-4c lower to 1-8c advance, May 86 5-8 to 86 7-8c, the corn market gains all around May touching 87 7-8c.

Oats were easy, sympathizing with wheat, the weakness starting at 1-8c off May 45 3-4c. Oats continued to average lower.

Provisions reflected the upward trend of the corn market and of hogs.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.— (Canadian Press.)—Stock prices gathered strength after an early period of irregularity in to-day's market. The prices sagged at the opening on the execution of a large accumulation of overnight selling orders, particularly in Motors and Oils, but the strong resistance shown by many issues resulted in a cessation of aggressive short selling before midday. The lowering of the call money rate to 4 per cent. after the renewal rate of 4 1-2, with funds in "outside market" available as low as 3 1-2 and the optimistic character of the weekly steel trade reviews helped to create bullish enthusiasm in the early afternoon. U. S. Steel, which closed at 136 1-4 last night, was run up to 137 7-8.

CATASTROPHE THREATENS PARIS AS THE SWELLING SEINE INVADES THE CITY AND CONTINUES TO RISE

Residents of the Island of St. Denis Forsake Their Homes and Join Other Flood Refugees in Barracks.

RIVER ROSE FOUR FEET WEDNESDAY; NOW AT HIGHEST LEVEL SINCE 1910

People in Oise Valley Driven to Upper Storeys — Marne Threatens Railway Communication to Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Paris is in an extremely critical situation: a further rise of thirty inches in the Seine would precipitate a catastrophe. Despite protective works hastily thrown up on both sides of the river, the waters are invading the city. The first effect of this is the closing of the Invalides railroad station, directly across the street from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Traffic to Versailles, Rambouillet, Dereux and Granille has been suspended. The island of St. Denis was abandoned last evening by the residents who took refuge in the city barracks, while Fort Vincennes set eside for the accommodation of refugees whle Fort Vincennes set aside for the accommodation of refugees in the eastern part of the city, already shelters hundreds.

The Seine rose from two to four feet yesterday and weather offices who predicted that the peak of the flood would be reached last night, say now that it will continue to swell until Friday. At Austerlitz Bridge, the Seine register 5.20 metres (about 17 feet))which is the highest since 1910, when the most disastrous floods in the history of the city occurred. The electric railway tracks between Paris and Versailles for several miles are under water.

While the people of Paris are not panicky, they are waiting for the worst.

Town Under Water

The flooding of the Oise has caused a veritable disaster along the whole length of the valley, which has the appearance of a lake nearly a mile wide. The town of Guise is completely under water, the population living in the upper stories of their houses and receiving provisions by boat.

The river Vesle began to overflow yesterday and Fisme and Braine are threatened. Soissons on the Aisne is cutt off from railroad communication, and the lower quarters have been evacuated.

The Marne A Torrent

The Marne continues a roaring torrent; it rose 30 inches in the past twenty four hours. Chateau Thierry is badly flooded. The northern railroad tracks between Paris and Lille, and Paris and Brussels are so deeply buried under water that the company has warned the public that transportation might have to be stopped.

Today and Friday, the official weather forecasters prohesy will see culminating point of the floods in the Paris region. It is still raining intermittently.

Communists Linked In Plot Against Mussolini

BOLOGNA, Jan. 7 (United Press) —The police here to-day raided the secret headquarters of the Communists and allegedly found documents linking them with the Zaniboni plot against the life of Premier Mussolini. One message declared that the party stood solidly with Zaniboni and would not deny "favoring" him.

CHILD HAD FOOT CAUGHT IN ROCK

Forced To Remain in Field Two Miles From Home in Blinding Snowstorm.

IMPRISONED HOURS.

HEPWORTH, Ont., January 7. — Canadian Press. — To have her foot wedged between two rocks in a field two miles from home, and to have to remain in that position for several hours in a blinding snowstorm, was the experience of Kathleen Tyncall, a little seven year old girl of Dyersback, last evening.

Kathleen and some of her school mates were taking short cuts home from school, when she stumbled and fell between two large rocks. When she attempted to arise the child found that she was unable to do so.

Within half an hour residents of the entire neighborhood had arrived on the scene. It was found that there were only two ways that the child could be released: to have her foot amputated or chop through several feet of solid rock.

After several hours sufficient of the rock was cut away to release the child. The little girl is reported to be none the worse for her experience.

NAPLES, Jan. 7 (United Press). —The new eruption of Mount Vesuvius is normal, according to Professor Malladra of the Vesuvius laboratory.

"This eruption," he said, "shows that the volcano is functioning perfectly, demonstrating that there will be no outbreaks at the side of the mountain."

The new outburst is in the main crater, sending out considerable lava and causing loud explosions.

Happy But Heartsick Says Mrs. Berlin—Father Silent

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press) — I am supremely happy, but oh, so heart sick," Mrs. Irving Berlin confessed to reporters upon her arrival from Atlantic City yesterday. She referred to her father's failure to send any word to her or to her husband since their marriage Monday.

Mrs. Berlin appeared on the verge of breaking down, biting her lips as if to restrain tears and nervously fingering her handkerchief.

She intimated she and her husband would probably not sail on the Leviathan on Saturday for a honeymoon in Europe.

Special delivery letters have been sent to both the father and mother of the bride, but the former has not replied, she said. Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Company, continued to be silent on his daughter's marriage and published reports that he had drawn up a new will disinheriting his daughter could not be verified at his home last night.

MAN INJURED BY HEAVY BUS WHEN CROSSING ROAD

William Sedgwick Was Struck By Comet on Hunter Street East.

CONDITION SERIOUS.

Rear End of Bus Swerved When Driver Applied Brake, Striking Man.

William J. Sedgewick, 498 Mark Street, was seriously injured about noon today when he was struck by the Comet bus while attempting to cross Hunter Street. He was rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital where he was attended to by Dr. Baker. His left side was badly injured, and at 3 o'clock it was reported that there was no change in his condition, which is considered somewhat serious.

William Blewett, driver of the Comet bus, stated that he was driving east on Hunter Street and when approaching Driscoll Terrace he noticed Sedgewick come to the edge of the sidewalk. He sounded his horn and when he noticed him stop he proceeded and looked to see if there was any traffic coming out of Driscoll Terrace. When he looked ahead again, Sedgwick was running across the street in front of the bus. He immediately applied his brakes and the bus swerved on the slippery surface of the street, the rear end striking the running man.

MEIGHEN TO CHALLENGE LIBERALS WITH NO-CONFIDENCE AMENDMENT

Conservatives Likely to Acquiesce in Appointment of Speaker Today.

EXPECT SURPRISES

OTTAWA, Ont., January 7.—Canadian Press. — Canada's fifteenth Parliament opens business to-day with the election of a Speaker for the House of Commons.

At three o'clock commoners will be summoned to the bar of the senate, and there in phraseology that runs away back into the history of Parliament at Westminster, be notified to elect a Speaker. Then, in the Commons Chamber, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux will be proposed by the government. There was some suggestion a few days ago that the Conservatives would make the motion for the election of a Speaker the first test of strength, but this, it is now believed, is improbable. Opportunity, however, will probably be taken to press the point that the appointment of a Speaker, or the adoption of any purely formal motion, should no be regarded as a vote of confidence in the government carrying authority to make appointments.

Test on Amendment.

Leading Conservatives, it is understood, are working on a draft amendment to the address and, on this amendment, expect to challenge the government. The amendment has still to go before caucus, but resent intentions, it is believed, are to make it a straight vote of non-confidence in the government. The amendment will probably be based on the claim that the government has lost the confidence of the people and has no constitutional authority to remain in office.

The probabilities are that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, Conservative leader, will himself move the amendment early next week.

The vote, however, may not come till after prolonged debate. With so many new members of the House it is quite likely that the speaking list on both sides will be long. Should the government be sustained an adjournment of the House for a month or five weeks will probably be asked to enable Cabinet reorganization to be effected and bye-elections to be held Formalities Friday.

It is not till Friday following the election of a Speaker of the Commons that the Governor-General will formally open Parliament with the speech from the throne. A document, it is stated, of many revisions, the speech from the throne, will probably be an indication of lower taxation as announced by Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Finance, during the election campaign.

Reduction in Income and Sales tax are reported to be in view although specific information under this head is not likely to be available till the budget is brought down.

Other Legislation.

The speech, it is stated, will also indicate: Legislation to give effect to the Canada-West Indies treaty concluded just after the close of last session; a rural credit scheme; an immigration and colonization scheme following on the new agreement for reduced fares for British immigrants recently concluded between the British and the Canadian governments; return of natural resources to Alberta. There is also talk of a Commission on Maritime Rights, of a bridge to connect the Hudson Bay Railway, and consolidation of the C. N. R. debt; also no doubt, the speech will speak of trade developments particularly in exports, and of the bountiful wheat harvest.

Although the Legislatures of some of the West India Islands have approved the Canada-West Indies Trade Treaty, it has not yet been discussed in the Canadian parliament, and still needs its ratification. During the campaign the treaty met with considerable Conservative criticism, its path through parliament may be a stormy one.

Expectations among the members are that the session will be replete with surprises, with the near-present likelihood of a snap division.

TRADE REPRISALS AGAINST GREAT BRITAIN FOR CONTROL OF RUBBER OPPOSED AS U. S. ENQUIRY BEGINS

Herbert Hoover Says Retaliation Would Only Aggravate the "Monopoly."

OUTLINES COURSE

Government "Intrusion" Into Trading Regarded as Dangerous Practice.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press).—Investigation of the situation growing out of the British rubber monopoly was started yesterday by the House commerce committee. Opening the inquiry, Secretary Hoover assailed "intrusion" by any government into trading operation on a vast scale.

"This practice,' he said, "raises a host of new dangers— the inevitable aftermath of any such effort by political agencies to interfere with the normal progress of supply and demand."

The foreign monopolistic control of the crude rubber price, he added, threatens "not only the sane progress of the world but contains in it great dangers to international goodwill."

In addition to the committee's hearing, the rubber situation was discussed in the House by Representative Frear, Republican, Wisconsin, while in the Senate a resolution was introduced by Senator King, Democrat, Utah, to direct the judiciary committee to investigate alleged manipulations of rubber prices by foreign and domestic "monopolies."

Reprisals Suggested.

Mr. Frear asserted that the rubber investigation "appears to have been based" on high rubber prices and "American press reports alleged to be propaganda", and that the Tilson resolution ordering it seems "to be made the basis for commercial reprisals."

Secretary Hoover, on the other hand, told the committee that the rubber situation could not be solved by acquiescence or acceptance and that it would only be compounded and aggravated by retaliatory action. He urged the working out, instead, of a broad constructive solution.

"It is my belief," he said, "that we should confine ourselves simply to a consideration of what temporary measure of relief we can find and what final and complete protection we ultimately can give our citizens through assuring our raw material at reasonable prices from competitive sources."

THE WEATHER.

Yesterday afternoon the temperature was up to 40 degrees; this morning it was down to 4 degrees. This is but one of the frequent sudden changes common to this part of Ontario. At present it is moderately cold over all the northern half of the continent, but not decidedly cold any place.—W.P.

Death Ray Inventor Suspected Of Insanity

NEW YORK, January 7. — Canadian Press. — Dr. Frederick Gray, neurologist, head of the Grays Electro-Chemical Laboratries, and inventor of the death-ray machine, which he claims may be held in the hand, and will stop a trolley car a block away, was committed to a Jersey City Hospital for observation as to his sanity to-day by acting recorder Edward Griffin.

FARM LABORER TO BE ARRAIGNED FOR AXE MURDER

Napoleon Pelletier Was Last Person Seen Near Victim's Home.

MENTALLY UNWELL.

Police Believe Suspect is Not Quite Sane—Claim Confession.

OTTAWA, Jan. 7. — (Canadian Press). — Held for the murder of Miss Mary Kilfoyle, an aged woman who was found in a dying condition in her cabin near Manotick yesterday as the result of a murderous attack, Napoleon Pelletier, 21, will be arraigned in Carleton County Police Court to-day. He was arrested last night at the Ottawa police station, after he had applied for a bed for the night. Reports from Manotick allege he was the last person seen near the Kilfoyle house before the woman was struck down by a blow with an axe. Pelletier seemed little concerned over the accusation and denied he was responsible. Police officials express the opinion that Pelletier is mentally unwell.

Claim Confession.

The police report that Napoleon Pelletier, 21 years old, a farm helper and lumberjack, has confessed that he killed Miss Mary Kilfoyle.

GREAT LAKES TO SEA WATER WAY SEEMS CERTAIN

Construction of St. Lawrence Scheme Will Begin in 18 Months.

ST. PAUL MEETING

Tidewater Congress Predicts Early Agreement by U. S. and Canada.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—A prediction that construction work on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence tidewater canal will begin within a year and a half was made at the closing session of the Tidewater Congress here yesterday.

W. L. Harding, former governor of Iowa, and a pioneer supporter of the project, and H. C. Gardiner, of Chicago, who has been president of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association since its organization six years ago, were among the prominent delegates who predicted, "The United States and Canada will be digging this ditch within 18 months."

"The report of the army engineers will be ready in April. During the summer the United States and Canada should be able to arrive at a satisfactory treaty. Then an enabling act through congress is the next step. With this out of the way work can start on the canal in the early summer of 1927 or 18 months from now," said Dr. Harding.

O. E. Fleming of Windsor, Ontario, President of the Canadian Deep Waterways Association, spoke of the question raised recently concerning the control of a portion of the St. Lawrence river bed which is said to be owned by the province of Quebec.

Mr. Fleming stated that the Privy Council of Canada, has twice ruled that even though a province may own the soil of a river bed, it is the Dominion Government which controls the water channel. This decision is final and cannot be appealed, he explained, and thus prevents any province from holding up the tidewater program.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT TO-DAY LACKS DISPLAY THAT WILL MARK FORMAL OPENING BY LORD BYNG

Commons Summoned To Senate Chamber, But Given No Message, as Speaker Not Chosen.

MEMBERS SIGN ROLL.

To-morrow Speaker Will Announce His Election and Claim Privileges.

OTTAWA, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—The House of Commons met at 3 o'clock this afternoon for the election of its speaker. All through the morning, commissioners had been administering the oath to members who had each signed the illuminated book known techincally as "The Roll." Seated in their chamber the members of the Fifteenth Parliament awaited the resounding knock on the door and the bowing gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who announced in the old formal phrase: "That His Honor the Deputy of the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honorable house in the Chamber of the honorable the Senate." But in the Senate chamber, the members did not remain long. They were informed by Speaker Bostock of the Senate that the Governor General did "Not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present Parliament until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law." And back they went again to their own chamber to choose their presiding officer for the new Parliament.

Thus today's ceremony lacks the display which will mark the formal opening by the Governor General tomorrow. Then the Commons, their Speaker elected, will once more be summoned to the bar of the Senate. The Speaker-elect will himself announce to the Governor General the choice of the House. He will formally claim all ancient rights and privileges of the Commons and, in old lines, will pray His Excellency that if at any time he fall in error the fault "may be imputed to me and not to the Commons, whose servant I am."

Government supporters claim that they will have a normal majority of at least seven or eight, and there is talk among them of a couple of sessions before another dissolution. They lay stress on the claim that there is no general desire for another election this year, and argue that this will be an important factor in preventing a defeat of the Government.

The Conservatives on the other hand, take the ground that the Government has no mandate and are preparing for an attack.

The whips of all parties have strenuous and exciting days ahead.

Bootleg Radio Being Sought Send Out Questionable Jokes

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 7. — (United Press).—The operators of a "bootleg" radio station near this city, which is broadcasting questionable jokes and cuss words, almost nightly, are being sought by the police and radio inspectors.

The bootleg station is believed to be located about 25 miles from here, and probably consists of a home-made set operated by an amateur.

CHINESE WOMEN JOIN REVOLUTION

Urge Commission Form of Government and Army of Women.

TO FREE CHINA.

(By Bert L. Kuhn, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

SHANGHAI, January 7. — The organization of a commission form of government for China is being advocated by the Shanghai Associated Women's Union, which is endeavoring to get Chinese women to participate in a revolutionary "army" to overthrow the Peking regime.

"We must establish a representative commission to take the place of the present so-called government," says a manifesto issued by the women," and we must fight for the release of China from imperialistic bonds.

"Dear sisters, if we really wish to free China and throw off the yoke of slavery, we must join in the grand revolutionary movement. We must not act in the ladylike manner of the old style. Current conditions make us parasites of militarism and imperialism. We must consider ourselves crusaders in the overthrown of imperialism and militarism and release our nation from slavery. Long live the women of China.

"Long live China!"

TWENTY-FIRST CLUB MEETING

Members of Battalion Invited Comrades From Other Units.

HAPPY OCCASION.

(Contributed.)

Members of the 21st Battalion Club invited some of their comrades of other oversease units to their January meeting last night, and the nocturnal rest of the poultry on show in the Armouries was somewhat disturbed by the voices that joined lustily in the singing of many of those ditties and airs which are so dear to the "returned" men.

This club showed its active spirit and the true camaradie that exists amongst members in no uncertain way, and at the close everyone was convinced that there were only two real units in France in the Canadian Corps which did any real work, and these were the 2nd Battalion and the 21st Battalion.

Members and visitors alike were taken out into no man's land, trenches were lost and won, but mostly the latter. With the true characteristic of the soldier only the happy side was discussed and enlarged upon which must at times create a little doubt in the minds of those less fortunate in not being on active service that the everyday life of "Tommy" was far rosier than was really depicted in the newspaper reports published during the war.

From a musical point of view, much doubt still exists whether the harmony of the 21st is to be compared with the 2nd or even the 4th Battalion. One thing, however, is quite certain, that none of the representatives of these units would have gone very far with their vocal efforts without the assistance of Mr. Nicholls and his De Laval Orchestra. These gentlemen contributed very largely to the evening's fun, and merited the applause which their received. Comrade W. G. Hall acted as chairman, and his efforts at "keeping the ball rolling" were assisted by Comrade Harris, who had his audience convulsed with laughter.

Altogether a real good time was spent, and ample justice was done to the refreshments so generously provided by some of the members.

The 21st Battalion Club has come to stay and will not become extinct until the last member "Goes West."

VINDICATION FOR STEPHEN S. WISE

Zionist Organization Upholds Famous Rabbi.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5. — Dr. Stephen S. Wise to-day stands vindicated before the millions of Jews throughout the country, some of whom had branded him unfaithful after his sermon of December 20, in which he was quoted as saying Jesus muust be accepted as a man and not as a myth.

By a vote of 71 to 1, the executive committee of the Zionist Organization of America refused to accept Dr. Wise's resignation as chairman of the United Palestine Fund, which was tendered after the storm arose over his utterance.

Although Dr. Wise maintained throughout the controversy that he had been misquoted and his statements misinterpreted, the ultra-orthodox faction would not swerve from their stand that he resign.

After the rabbi's sermon had been closely examined by members of the committee, and Dr. Wise had explained that what he had tried to convey was that "Jesus was a historic being, that he was not a God but a man, and that he was not a Christian but a Jew," a vote was taken. A heated discussion in which the Union of Orthodox Rabbis, which had previously demanded his resignation be accepted was accused of playing politics, preceded the vote.

The annual meeting of S.S. No. 8, Whitfields, was held on Wednesday morning, December 30th at ten o'clock, with Councillor R. J. McKnight in the chair. Practically all the ratepayers of the section were present.

Mr Fred McMahon was appointed secretary and read the minutes of the last annual meeting which were received. Mr. Hilliard Lang, the trustees' secretary treasurer read the financial report which showed a balance on hand. After the general business was disposed of came the election of officers.

It was moved by E. Armstrong and seconded by Archie Johnson that Wes Williamson be returned trustee for another term.

Moved in amendment by J. W. Garver and seconded by Offa Williamson that Harry Dawson be elected trustees. It was proposed by Wilf. Elson that the vote be taken by ballot, but when put to the meeting was defeated and the open vote taken, when Wes. Williamson was reelected by the overwhelming majority of twenty-five to five. The change in the trustee system was discussed and it was decided to forward a resolution to the Minister of Education protesting against any change in the present trustee system of the Public School of Ontario. It was proposed by W. Elson that a secretary treasurer be appointed to act outside of the trustees, but was turned down. It was moved by Thos. Armstrong and seconded by R. TURKS PREFER TO RETAIN FEZ

Winter Lends Support To Contentions of Traditionalists.

DISLIKE HATS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—The cold winter winds that now blow over Turkey are giving a new turn to the famous hat question, by raising a great controversy over the method of saluting with the new head gear.

The conservatives, and those who are addicted to colds, argue that the old Turkish salaam, which left the fez comfortably on the head, is not incompatible with the hat. The progressives, however, maintain that with the adoption of the European method of head covering, it becomes necessary to adopt the European method of uncovering. Those opposed to this new-fangled and what they term death-courting business of baring the head in the teeth of the north wind, point to Mussolini as a representative European who salutes with hand on heart, without lifting his hat.

The Turkish salaam, the bow from the waist while the hand metaphorically scoops dust from the street to touch chin and forehead, is declared to be too graceful and picturesque a gesture to be discarded, and the hope is expressed that the consevatives will not let it pass away.

QUEBEC HOUSE OPENING TO-DAY

Church Union Bill Important Measure For the Legislature.

QUEBEC, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Hon. Narcisse Perodeau, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec, will open the Legislature at 3 o'clock this afternoon with all due ceremony. The Royal 22nd Regiment will furnish the guard of honor, and the officers of the garrison will attend in full dress uniform.

Church, bench and society will be fully represented in the red chamber when the summons goes forth to the members of the Assembly at attend to hear the Royal will. Because of the illness of Archbishop Roy, head of the Archdiocese of Quebec, Mgr. Langlois, administrator, will represent that church, while the Rt. Rev. Dr. Williams, Anglican Bishop of Quebec, will represent the Protestants. It is learned that there will be a reference in the speech from the throne to the death of Cardinal Begin since the last session.

The two political parties find themselves in exactly the same numerical position as a year ago. The Conservative party has lost one seat, that of Jacques Cartier which was opened up by the resignation of Hon. E. L. Patenaude to enter the Federal arena, and which seat at the bye-election was captured by the Liberal candidate, Victor Marchand, but in return the Opposition scored a win in Argenteuil, J. L. St. Jacques, K.C., a prominent Montreal lawyer, winning out against George Dodger. The other two bye-elections, Berthier and Champlain, went to the Government, there being no change in this respect.

Of interest this session is the Church Union Bill, to which the Legislature is pledged by resolution, though not to any definite bill, and the issue will arise here as to property owned in common by the Presbyterian Church, such as colleges and trust funds. In all probability the precedent set by the Ontaria Legislature in naming a commission to handle such matters will be followed here.

PROGRESSIVE POLICY.

Will Avoid Obstructionist Methods.

REGINA, Sask., Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Speaking before the joint convention of Federal and Provincial Progressives here yesterday, Dr. C. E. At the opening of the session a telegram of congratulation was forwarded to Robert Forke, Federal leader, in connection with his success in bringing unity to Federal Progressive ranks.

OPPOSE DEBT PACT.

Stability of Italian Dictatorship Questioned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press.) — Approval by the House ways and means committee yesterday of war debt settlements negotiated since the last Congress was coupled with an announcement by two Democratic committee members that they would oppose acceptance of the Italian settlement on the House floor.

These two, Representatives Rainey of Illinois, and Hull of Tennessee, based their opposition to the Italian settlement on the ground that a dictatorship was not a sufficiently stable form of Government to guarantee a contract extending over more than half a century.

CHANGE POLICY PANGALOS SAYS

Greek Premier Became Dictator To Combat Communist Propaganda.

WILL CONFORM.

LONDON, Jan. 7. — (Canadian Press).—The Daily Mail prints a personal message from Premier Pangalos of Greece, stating, among other things, that the most important reason for his assumption of dictatorship is the necessity of striking effectively at the serious Communist propaganda.

The character of government, he says, has not changed; it has not become militaristic, but, on the contrary, Admiral Hadjikiriakos has resigned from the Ministry of the Navy. Premier Pangalos announces that Greece's foreign policy will be absolutely changed and the country will observe its obligations as a member of the League of Nations.

THE G.W.V.A. FLAG PLAN.

The scheme of street decorations proposed by the Peterboro branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, who have secured a supply of flags for sale to local business men, is one that has been adopted with splendid results in many cities.

The plan is to bore holes at the edge of the pavement in front of the various stores, in which the flagpoles are set on holidays or other occasions when a display of the national standard is called for.

The spectacle of a street lined on both sides with flags displayed in this manner is very striking, and the scheme has the advantage of being very easily carried out, as the flags can be erected or taken down in a few seconds.

Peterboro needs such a system of decoration much more than many other centres, judging by the few flags usually displayed here on special occasions, and a great adoption of the G.W.V.A.'s plan would make a great difference in the appearance of the business section.

The ready sale of these flags will assist the G.W.V.A. in its work on behalf of returned soldiers, and at the same time will help to relieve the customary barren aspect of the city's streets on national holidays.

BROADCASTING COUNCIL MEETINGS.

The Mayor of Hamilton is out with a suggestion that the broadcasting of the proceedings of the City Council by radio might do much to create a popular interest in civic affairs.

The idea is modern, but of doubtful value.

Tried out, it would be more likely to make the radio unpopular than it would be to fulfill the object for which it is suggested.

Much of the routine business of any Council is pretty dry material for broadcasting, and by the time half a dozen Aldermen had mumblingly introduced "bylaw no blank, a bylaw dealing with certain streets or parts of streets in the city of Peterboro," etc., the average listener-in would either take an axe to his set or frantically turn the dials in search of a station where something more lively in the line of entertainment could be expected.

There are sessions, of course, in which the debates are marked with considerable action, and if it could be known in advance that Ald. Whoozit and Ald. Blank were going to come almost to blows over the important question of a street crossing or the cutting down of a dead tree, it might be possible to persuade enough radio enthusiasts to hold their dials for the municipal broadcast to make the experiment worth while. But many men in public positions talk too much now.

Put them in front of a microphone and let them know that their words might be picked up in Mexico and the result might be a flow of conversation that would make the best previous effort look tame.

We had better stick to the newspaper as the connecting link between the Council and the citizens, and reserve the radio for more enjoyable entertainment.

USELESS DEPUTATIONS.

There is much in the protest of Hamilton Aldermen against unnecessary municipal deputations that will be accepted by Examiner readers as reasonable.

It is necessary and desirable, of course, that conventions at which matters of interest to municipal governments are discussed should be attended, but it will strike most people that the presence of the head of the department interested in any particular convention is all that is required.

The visit of the Chief of Police to a Police Chiefs' annual conference, or of the Chief of the Fire Department to a similar gathering of Fire Chiefs, is good business, because at such conventions problems of great importance are discussed, and the experts in attendance get the benefit of each other's knowledge and experience.

But there is no particular reason why the chairmen of committees should be sent to these conferences.

The chairman is only a temporary holder of his office, likely to be succeeded next year by somebody else, and his presence at conventions is totally unnecessary, representing an expenditure for which there is no adequate return.

Peterboro's Council in recent years has not been guilty of a great amount of joy-riding at the expense of the citizens, but if the Aldermen are sincere in their demands for retrenchment it should be possible to further reduce the appropriations for deputations to outside points.

By sending the heads of departments to important conventions and confining the deputations waiting upon Government officials to the chairmen of the committees interested, considerable saving might be affected.

ON THE MAP IN THE WINTER, TOO.

The fact that a Richmond, Va., young man made a trip to Peterboro for the express purpose of spending a couple of weeks in skiing and other winter pastimes is conclusive proof of the soundness of the Examiner's contention that we have been making a mistake in not treating our winter weather as an asset, rather than a liability.

Ontario has become the summer playground of the continent; there is no reason why this Province should not also claim attention as a winter playground, offering rare attractions for those who love the great outdoors.

We should cash in on our frost and snow, our blue skies and sparkling air, our opportunities for skating and skiing, tobogganing and snow-shoeing.

Instead of trying to hide our snow-covered spaces as something to be ashamed of we should be advertising among our neighbors to the south that Ontario offers advantages to red-blooded men and women in the way of winter recreation that the famed Swiss resorts might well envy.

Peterboro, for example, should have a municipal toboggan slide worthy of a bustling Ontario city of 22,000 inhabitants, instead of a makeshift structure that does not provide a thrill for even its youngest patron.

The same people who come to this district in the summer to enjoy the wonderful charms of the Kawartha Lakes might, many of them, be induced to pay us a winter visit if we could offer them worth-while recreation when they got here.

Why can't the idea be put over that Ontario is not only a fine place in which to spend the summer, but is also a mighty attractive spot the whole year round?

We should not be content to be on the map only three or four months a year.

DECIDING AGAINST EXPENDITURES.

Bylaws did not fare well in many of the municipalities which held their elections on Monday, says the London Advertiser. A survey shows that many more went down to defeat than were carried, and it also demonstrates that they were of a very wide variety.

In Fort William a proposal was defeated to grant certain conditions for enlarging a local hotel; Port Arthur refused to take over the Y.M.C.A., and to purchase a building there; Stratford went on record as refusing to purchase the gas company, and also defeated a bylaw to spend $15,000 on the erection of a comfort station. St. Catharines defeated a bylaw to spend $25,000 for a grandstand in an athletic park. Clinton turned down a proposal to erect a collegiate, and Dundas ratepayers refused to sanction the purchase of a site for a high school. Fergus refused a fixed assessment to a manufacturing company. Goderich decided by a very narrow majority against a new municipal building, and Kincardine ratepayers would not sanction $5,000 for the purchase of a fire truck.

Most of these projects appear to have been for very substantial purposes, investments similar to those made in the same places at other times, and some of which will no doubt have to be made sooner or later. It might even be argued that there were mistakes made in the decisions of the voters, but the plain fact remains that the defeat of so many bylaws shows that the people have set themselves against increased expenditure, and they have done it in a number of widely separated places.

The taxpayers have come to know that increased expenditures mean increased taxation, and it must be that they realize that they are heavily enough taxed already. It is a tendency that should not be overlooked. It is easy enough to state that a place is not progressive because it refuses to spend money, but the ability to spend money for municipal or any other purposes must be measured by the ability of the people living in a community to provide it. When the people vote as they did in these places on Monday are they not in the same position as an individual who, after contemplating some proposed expenditure for his home or personal comfort, says frankly "I can't afford it?"

DOING HOUSEWORK.

Representative Sol Bloom of New York is prepared to propose that the U. S. quota law be lifted in favor of young women from foreign countries who want to come to United States to work as dmestics. Representative Bloom claims that "many good positions at $18 and $20 a week with board and room go begging while girls take factory or restaurant jobs at $12 a week, or remain idle, without even considering housework."

The New York politician takes the situation very seriously, and says the lack of help in private homes is causing many people to quit housekeeping and go to hotels to live. The great American home, which he describes as "the cradle of discipline and religion," stands in danger of being abandoned if something is not done to get girls to go in and do the work.

It is very patent that legislation is not the cure, because there can be no guarantee that those admitted as housekeepers would stay with it very long. When they got their bearings and sniffed the atmosphere of the land of the free the chances are that they'd be off with the rest of them looking for work elsewhere. It would take a whole army of inspectors to see that they "stayed put."

Housework should be attractive as a source of employment, but it is not, and yet it is difficult to say why. Here is the way in which the answer was given by a young woman who was asked for her opinion:

"Housework is not as desirable as employment in an office, a telephone exchange or in a store. The reason is that girls working in any of these places feel that they are all more or less on the same footing. They have regular hours, they have either their own homes or their own room and a great independence. A girl working at housework, and I know a number of them, has to go in by the side or back door. Her hours are long, and if she happens to be in a home where they do much entertaining she frequently is called up to be on duty until midnight or after. If she has a gentleman friend she has no place to entertain except in the kitchen. When it comes times for meals she finds in many cases that she has to wait on the family first and then get her own meals after and eat them alone in the kitchen. I think that right there is one of the reasons why girls prefer other employment to housework—they are made to feel that they are not on the same standing as other people.

"There is another reason that occurs to me, but I don't know how much it has to do with the question, and that is the amount of talk that many women indulge in about their maids. It is a popular, and I think a much overdone topic of conversation, and it may be one of the reasons that makes it hard for these same women to get and keep efficient help."

Undoubtedly the cure—if it is needed and to be secured—lies in the making of housework more desirable. If it were more desirable, why, more girls would be ready to engage in it, no matter if it were in New York or any place else.—London Advertiser.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

The Examiner hastens to be the first to suggest Miss Agnes MacPhail, M.P., as Deputy-Speaker. What, no seconder?

An expert says that rubber prices have reached their peak. But that may be stretching it a bit.

It cost Brockville $8,000 for a Provincial audit of the municipality's books, which revealed everything in good order. The satisfaction caused by that finding may be considered by the people of Brockville as worth $8,000, but it is doubtful.

The proceedings at Ottawa will jump into front page prominence from today on.

A THOUGHT.

BACK WHERE HE BELONGS

There are a lot of little fellows today that are overworking their wishbone and seldom, if ever, using their backbone.

They sit and wish for success but are not willing to strive for it.

A wish is as useless as whispering in the ear of a marble statue.

These little men wish to be big but lack the first necessary thing and this thing is to be—civil or courteous.

An inconsiderate or uncivil small man has about as much chance to rise to responsibility as a mummy that has been buried for a thousand years.

The discourteous dub is always a nubbin always the smallest ear in the corn crib. If he does try to be civil to others it is only because he is afraid of the boss.

Let me give you an experience: Recently I called on a big firm and asked to see the newly appointed manager who I understand is now suffering from deflated self-appreciation. I was told that he was "in conference." He sent out no word as to when he would see me, neither did he invite me to call again.

That same day I called on a competitor of this house and was told that the manager was very busy, but he politely requested me to wait for him, and of course I waited.

Being a little "hot under the collar," when I met the polite manager of the competitive house, I pointed out a place where a big order was waiting for someone—an order with profit enough in it to pay the hire of that uncivil or discourteous first fellow in the other house a salary for years.

The little man that I first met, so I am told, is now back on the adding machine where he belongs.

THIRD VICTIM OF THROAT DISEASE

Epidemic Reported in Township of Chandos.

APSLEY, Jan. 6.—A very pleasant function took place at the home of Mrs. Philip Tanner, Chandos, on Wednesday last, when she entertained her Sunday school to tea, and the annual distribution of gifts from the Christmas tree. A very happy time was spent in juvenile games and singing and the company was augmented by the parents and friends of the children. The Rev. C. Spence distributed the gifts and prizes, after paying a warm tribute to Mrs. Tanner's labours as teacher of the Sunday school. The scholars expressed their appreciation by presenting her with a handsome china dish.

The usual watch night service on New Year's eve was held in St. George's church, and was attended by a congregation numbering twenty-two, some coming more than seven miles out.

The Rev. E. W. Gardner, who has been assisting Mr. Spence in the Mission for the last three months, went away on Tuesday. Mr. Gardner has done good work in the eastern part of the Mission, and his departure is much regretted by all.

A big vote was recorded in the town hall on Monday in the municipal election, nearly every elector marking a ballot. James Hendley, who will be 104 years old on the 15th of March, and still fairly robust, was snap-shotted as he left the polling booth.

A malignant throat disease which has for some time been prevalent in Chandos township, claimed a third victim last week it is reported, when David Wease, township clerk, lost his little daughter after a short illness.

Discussing the question of road repairing at the nomination meeting of Chandos Council someone remarked that there was no gravel to be obtained in the township for the purpose. Mr. A. Davis, the new councillor, contradicted the statement and offered to give a guarantee that he could supply off his farm a million loads of good gravel. There will be no excuse for mud holes in Chandos after this.

CATTLE, GRAIN AND PRODUCE

Peterboro—Toronto—Montreal Winnipeg

TORONTO LIVESTOCK.

TORONTO, Jan. 6.—Sales of cattle at the Union Stock Yards on Tuesday totalled 1242 head, and this accounted for nearly all on sale for the day. Since yesterday morning, the receipts are 103 cars, 1393 cattle, 538 calves, 2659 hogs, and 574 sheep and lambs. Rogers and Maybee picked up about 60 cattle on Tuesday at easy prices, and will ship out this week. The Old Country market is not good, and shippers say they are losing money at the present time. Four choice steers were bought this morning at $8.35 a cwt.

Export heifers and bulls were steady. Heifers sold at $7.50 to $8, and bulls $5 to $5.75 a cwt. There was good competition in the good to choice handyweight butchers, and prices were firm from $6.50 to $7.50 a cwt. Medium quality handyweights sold around $6 a cwt. Butchers' cows were not too easy to buy, and any good cows brought $5 a cwt. up. Medium cows were $1 a cwt. under this.

Buffalo buying is a supporting influence to the local calf market, and prices are easier with a drop of 50 cents a cwt. again yesterday in the American market. Quotations were off almost as much here, but some tops made 14 cents a pound.

More ewe and wether lambs sold today at 15 cents a pound, and most of the bucks went at 12 cents. This market is up 25 cents a cwt. Choice sheep sold at 8 cents a pound.

There were 2300 hogs in today, and there seems no doubt that there will be a general flat price of $12.50 a cwt. f.o.b. Too many over fat hogs are arriving, and it has been found necessary to cut these 50 cents a cwt. With feed plentiful, and the supply of hogs scarce, there is a temptation to feed longer than usual.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—The export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market today showed a slight improvement. There was a better demand from both United Kingdom and continental buyers in nearby positions, and as the prices bid were satisfactory to exporters and the ocean freight room available from Canadian ports at reasonable rates they were in a position to do some business, with the result that sales of wheat, oats and barley were made.

Owing to the above there was more enquiry in the local market for cash grain and sales of straight loads of Canadian Western No. 3 barley were made at 70 1-4 cents per bushel, c.i.f. Bay Ports.

Owing to the renewed strength in the Canadian cash wheat situation today a firmer feeling prevailed in the local market for spring wheat grades of flour, but there was no actual change in prices announced.

The feature of the local egg situation was the decidedly weak feeling that developed in the market for strictly fresh eggs and prices scored a sharp decline of 5c to 8c per dozen which was attributed to the continued favorable weather prevailing for the production throughout the country and the fact that receipts here were somewhat larger than usual at this period of the year.

In sympathy with the above an easier feeling also prevailed in the market for storage eggs, and prices were reduced 1c to 2c per dozen which is the first change that has taken place in these grades for some time past. The volume of business was small. The receipts were 486 cases, as compared with 1,901 for the same day last week, and 224 for the corresponding day a year ago.

There were no further developments in the butter market, business generally being rather quiet on account of the holiday, but the undertone to the market was firm and prices were unchanged.

The receipts of cheese were 359 boxes, as against 87 for the same day last week, and 23 for the corresponding day a year ago. The improvement in the demand already noted was again in evidence, there being quite a few bids in the market from foreign buyers, with the result that some further business was done in that direction, but the trade on spot between houses was quiet and prices were nominally unchanged.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press).—Predictions of larger purchasing of wheat for Europe during the remainder of this crop year had more or less to do today with a rally that carried prices up 4 cents a bushel from an early low level. Reports of better domestic demand for flour were also a factor. The wheat market closed strong, 1 to 2 cents net higher, new style, May 1.80 3-4 to 1.80 7-8, and July 1.55 3-8 to 1.55 1-2. Corn finished at 1-2 to 5-8c advance, oats virtually unchanged and provisions varying from 12 cents decline to a rise of 32 cents.

WESTERN PROBLEMS WOULD BE SOLVED

Conference Decides That Completion of Waterway Is Necessary.

ST PAUL, Minn., Jan. 7.—(United Press).—The myriad economic problems in the heart of America would be solved by completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, it was decided at the northwest tidewater conference called by Governor Theodore Christianson.

Agricultural and industrial development in the Central United States and Canadian Provinces would be unlimited, the delegates contended.

Central Canada's transportation problem is far more serious than that of the United States, according to Frank H. Keefer of Ontario. Power was also seriously needed in Ontario he said.

"In all Ontario we have no coal, nothing from which power can be generated except waterpower and our water power is already in use. Unless this deep waterway of the St. Lawrence is developed we in Ontario face the necessity of erecting steam power plants.

VERULAM.

DUNSFORD, Jan. 7.—On Monday the village was quite alive, it being township election day. The reeveship hung between Foster Herron, North Verulam and J. R. Mitchell, South Verulam. The election decided in favor of Mr. Mitchell by a majority of 1 vote.

COBOURG, Jan. 7.—The municipal elections here resulted as follows:

Mayor—F. J. McArthur, re-elected by acclamation.

Reeve—Harry McGuire, elected by acclamation.

There was a three-cornered contest for the deputy-reeveship between W. J. Corbett, last year's Reeve; W. J. Maher and W. E. Cooper, the latter two being 1925 Councillors. It resulted in the election of Mr. Maher, who, by the way, is an ex-Mayor of Cobourg.

Mrs. Edith Kerr Macdonald is Cobourg's first lady Councillor. She is a daughter of the late Hon. Wm. Kerr, K.C., Senator, and a sister of Mr. F. D. Kerr, Peterboro. Mrs. Macdonald proved to be a popular candidate and polled a large vote. Her late father was Councillor and Mayor of Cobourg for eleven years.

Haldimand.

COBOURG, Jan. 7.—(Special).—Haldimand Township had one of the stiffest contests known in many years on Monday. There was a hot fight over every seat, and it was a regular old-time campaign. Haldimand has seen many a stiff battle, both political and municipal, and the one just ended was no exception. Miss E. May Mulholland, the lady candidate, and, by the way, the first lady to aspire to municipal honors in Haldimand, although not elected, made a fine run. The results when the ballots were counted on Monday night were as follows:

Reeve—A. R. McKenzie.

Deputy-Reeve—Stanley McBride.

Councillors—L. A. Isaac, Bertram Huskin, James Walsh.

Mr. Peter Haig, who opposed Mr. McKenzie for the reeveship, had he been elected, would have been a candidate for the Warden's chair of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham.

Mr. Stanley McBride was opposed by Mr. J. Harnden, a Councillor of four years' experience.

GAP IN HISTORY.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—(United Press).—Dean William Wade of the Pacific School of Religion and Professor of Semitic Literature, will organize an expedition to excavate the site of the city of Mizpah in Palestine, in hopes of finding some key to the Hittite language, he declared before sailing for Egypt yesterday.

The history of the Hittites is one of the greatest gaps in ancient history, Professor Wade declared. The people who came to Palestine before them, the Egyptians, and those who came afterward, having given up the task of deciphering the many inscriptions of the language.

SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE DENIED

Another Fruitless Day in Negotiating for Coal Agreement.

RUMOR BROADCAST

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press)—After an eight hour session anthracite miners and operators who are endeavoring to reach an agreement to end the hard coal strike were still deadlocked last night.

Widely circulated reports that an agreement had been reached were positiely denied. Many reports came into the Union League Club where the conference is being held to the effect that broadcasting stations had spread word throughout the anthracite regions that there had been a settlement.

Assurance was given by spokesmen both for the miners and for the operators that there was no basis for the reports and that the situation stood practically where it did when the joint conference began shortly before noon.

Prior to the six miners and six operators entering the conference room it was made known that neither side had anything new to offer.

WOMEN SUCCESSFUL IN ORCHESTRA WORK

Pianists, Harpists and 'Cellists Finding Place in Symphony Groups.

Women in symphony orchestras? Well, we hear occasionally a spirited discussion as to whether they are fitted for such work. Some conductors agree that they are and employ them; many do not. Those who contend, on the other hand, that women are fully competent for symphony work of the highest character, seem to have the best of it.

It has been urged that women have not the proper strength for the work; but this is nonsense when we observe the large number of women pianists, violinists, 'cellist and organists who are meeting with success as concert artists. Giving an arduous concert programme of solo works entirely from memory requires much more strength and mental concentration than playing a symphony programme from the notes, which is child's play in comparison. Besides, there are successful symphony orchestras composed exclusively of women in London, and in other large cities on the continent of Europe.

Many American symphony orchestras have women harpists, and several, among which the Cleveland and Minneapolis Orchestras, may be mentioned, have successfully embarked a few women violinists. In the smaller American cities which have symphony orchestras, many of the players are women.

America has established a symphony orchestra composed entirely of women, named the "American Women's Symphony Orchestra." Madame Elizabeth Kuyper, the organizer and conductor, is a Dutchwoman, who has had great success with women's symphonies in Britain, Holland and Germany. Madame Kuyper's enterprise has opened up a new field for women on this continent, and several cities have followed the example set by New York. Formerly, women musicians in America could only find employment in hotels or movie theatre orchestras, and very few were ever seen who could play more varied instruments than the violin or 'cello.

In Great Britain, however, as far back as 25 years ago, there were a number of very remarkable ladies' orchestras to be found at the various Spas in Summer, and during the Winter season in the cities and provinces on tour. From these could be derived musicians who could play almost any instrument used in a symphony, and it rarely happened that any one employed in such an orchestra was not a finished product of the highest musical colleges of England or the Continent.

Children's Colds

Are quickly, pleasantly relieved by Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine

If children's colds are got rid of promptly there will be less tendency to pneumonia and consumption in later life. It is the neglected, hanging-on cold that weakens the lungs and develops into serious trouble.

No treatment for coughs and colds was ever so popular with the children as Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It is so pleasant to the taste, so delightfully soothing and healing and affords relief so quickly that children soon turn to it instinctively when choked up with a cold or annoyed by coughing.

It is mother's favorite treatment for croup and bronchitis, for she knows it will bring relief when the midnight coughing spasms set in. It is wise to always have a bottle at hand for prompt use in emergency.

People Gorging Themselves With Food, Says Sir Arbuthnot Lane—Cavem an's Diet Was More Sens ible.

LONDON, Jan. 6 (Canadian Press) — The cave man, with only his limited food resources, chose a more sensible and healthful diet than his civilized descendant does, Sir W. Arbuthnot Lane, one of England's most eminent surgeons, said in an address to members of the Incorporated Association of Preparatory Schools.

The famous surgeon, just back from a six weeks visit to the United States, contended that with tempting food displayed in the shops, the homes, and almost everywhere, the world is eating entirely too much.

"We seem to be paying a terriblie price for civilization," said Sir Arbuthnot, explaining that modern men try to consume three or four times as much food as the savage had for his active life. This "overloading" is the principal cause of cancer and appendicitis, he declared.

INSURANCE MEN HOLD CONVENTION

"The Selection of Risks" Address by R. E. Dowsett Was Interesting.

Last week the Agency Force of the Central Ontario Branch of The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company held its Third Annual Convention at the Empress Hotel, Peteroboro. Almost every member of the organization was present and a spirit of good-will and enthusiasm prevailed.

In the evening the members were entertained at a banquet given by Manager E. L. Sackville. During dinner community singing, led by Mr. W. E. Weldon of Oakwood with Mr. Fred Chenhall at the piano was enjoyed by all. Later in the evening Mr. Weldon favored the men with a number of vocal selections. One of the veteran members, Mr. A. J. Campbell of Lindsay acted as chairman in his usual pleasing manner. Short addresses were given by Col. G. E. R. Wilson, Colborne; K. J. Haig, Colborne; G. B. Stevenson, Hastings; W. G. Morrison, Lakefield; F. L. Driscoll, T. Mark, Peterborough; Manager Sackville, Cashier Chidley and others. Head Office was represented by Mr. A. Kinch, Agency Inspector and Mr. R. E. Dowsett of the Medical Department. Mr Kinch addressed the meeting in an able manner, complimenting the agency staff on their splendid showing in 1925 and stated The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company had just closed the most successful year in its history. Mr. Dowsett gave an instructive address on "The Selection of Risks" after which a questionaire was opened which proved helpful to all.

A very pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation to Mr. Sackville of a package of completed applications. Much fresh stimulus was gained by all which will undoubtedly be felt in still greater achievement during 1926.

A Pimply Face Is Unsightly

Miss C. C. M. Smart, South Battleford, Sask., writes:—"A while ago I was troubled with facial blemishes, especially pimples, and was really ashamed to go out with such a bad looking face.

I tried 2 or 3 different remedies, but they didn't help me any, so one day a friend, who had been troubled the same as I was, advised me to use

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS

After I had taken two bottles there wasn't a pimple of any kind left on my face, and I now have a clear, smooth and velvety complexion."

DEAD ENGINEER BLAMED BY JURY

T. and N. O. Train Travelled Too Fast in Fog.

CRASH AT MULOCK

NORTH BAY, Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press).—"That the death of Engineer Sam Lackie was caused by the failure of the crew on extra train 30 on the T. & N.O. (Lackie's train) to approach the switch at Mulock under proper control."

This was the verdict given yesterday by Coroner Dr. W. F. McKee, who conducted the inquiry into Tuesday's wreck on the T. & N.O. when a north and southbound freight collided head-on in the yards at Mulock, despite the fact that they had meeting orders for that place.

Evidence showed that all weather conditions were such that unusual precautions should have been taken. A heavy fog that obscured the view of the crews for more than a few feet ahead of them hung over the tracks, and the rails were so slippery that a quick stop, even at slow rate of speed, was an impossibility.

The custom in approaching a switch is for trains to slow down to about eight miles an hour. Evidence was to the effect that the train piloted by Lackie was travelling about twelve miles an hour when it approached the switch, and was past it before the crew saw it.

The train, according to witnesses should have been slowed down so that McMillan, it's brakeman, would have been able to get off and open the switch before the train reached it.

BODIES BURIED BUT NO INQUEST

Sarnia Police Consider Inquiry Should Have Been Held.

TWO BURIED IN U. S.

SARNIA, Ont., Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press).—There are suspicious circumstances in connection with the deaths of two men whose bodies were recently found on Russell Island in the St. Clair River according to Constable Thomas Lynch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who returned yesterday from conducting an investigation. In view of the fact that the bodies were found on United States territory and that a United States coroner is reported to have sanctioned interment without an inquest it is considered unlikely that any further steps will be taken but Constable Lynch is of the opinion that because of certain circumstances an inquiry should have been held.

The two men, Robert Liddall, of Algoma, and Leslie Isaac, an Indian of Walpole Island, left Port Lambton in a rowboat for the United States shore on December 5. Three weeks later their bodies were found on Russel Island. Rumors of foul play which reaches Fort Lambton started an investigation but meanwhile the bodies had been interred.

A large sum of money which the men were said to have had in their possession was not found on the bodies. The weather conditions on Dec. 5 were not such as would cause death from exposure, it is claimed.

Easy To Gain Weight With Yeast and Iron

New Combination of Yeast With Vegetable Iron Builds Up Weight in Three Weeks

Thin, run-down and underweight men, women and children can improve their health, increase their energy and put on from five to twenty pounds of good solid flesh in three weeks.

A new combination of yeast vitamines with vegetable iron, renews the action of sluggish blood cells, drives out dangerous body poisons, increases energy and endurance and supplies the system with the vitamines that build up weight.

For years yeast has been known as a rich vitamine food, but not until we perfected "ironized yeast"—which comes in concentrated tablet form, was it possible to take yeast and iron in the right proportions to build up weight.

Vegetable "Iron" when combined with yeast is quite easy to digest, therefore better for the system. And "yeast" when ironized, becomes just twice as beneficial as ordinary fresh or cake yeast.

Ironized Yeast tablets are composed of concentrated food elements, therefore they are pleasant to take and free from drug-like effects. It makes no difference how old you are—or how young you are—how long you have been under-weight—or how much underweight you are, "ironized yeast" tablets are positively guaranteed to pick you right up, and add from five to twenty pounds of good firm flesh in three weeks' time. If they fail get your money back.

Sold by druggists, at $1.00 for a large 60-tablet package, or sent direct from laboratory on receipt of price. Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

"I dug a hole in the sand and buried it over there by that piece of timber," she cried, breathlessly, her heart throbbing furiously.

"Tell me, have you ever thought of me since——"

"And I marked the spot with three clam shells. Yes—here they are."

She was down on her knees, scooping at the sand with nervous, eager hands.

He stood over her, looking down, not at the hole she was making, but at a small curl of soft auburn hair that had escaped from the bandeau's rigid custody. Suddenly Connemara uttered a little cry, and lifted a very white young face.

"Oh, Mr. Lacy! The—the money isn't here! It's gone!"

CHAPTER XVII.

By Gerald Mygatt.

The cold muzzle of a revolver pressed against the aristocratic neck of Mr. Saltonstall Cabot Adams. A gruff voice spoke harshly.

"Now you count slow," it menaced. "You count all the way to five hundred, one count at a time, and if you know what's healthy for you you'll tick 'em off as slow as one of them there grandfather's clocks. Slower'n that, even. You just try to hurry the count and you'll earn yourself another nice wallop over the bean. D'ya want another? I'm askin' you."

Salt's head moved painfully in profound negation.

"A'right, then. You play the game, and when you get to five hundred you're your own boss. Get me? You can take that there bandage off your lamps and beat it."

"But the others?" Adams protested dully. "I tell you I can't leave them. How do I know——?"

"A lot of books could be wrote about what you don't know," snarled the voice. "But to ease your mind, if you got any, I'll slip you the straight dope. The others, if you mean the skinny dame and the pint-size old geezer, is entirely O.K. They ain't goin' to be hurt any more than you are—that's providin' you count that five hundred. You do what we say, and don't worry about no others. Get me? A'right—let's hear you start countin'."

Salt did exactly as he was bid. He strove to recall the leisurely measure of his own great-great-grandfather's timepiece, designed for an Adams by an Adam, and having recalled it he began, in a manner of speaking, to tick. It never occurred to him that this was an undignified procedure for a Saltonstall. His one controlling thought was a deep desire to avoid what Mr. Pooch had characterized as another nice wallop over the bean. He had had enough of being walloped over the bean. It had proved a form of massage of a most unsatisfactory nature.

In his boyhood Salt had many times rattled off five hundred by fives in gay games of hide and seek. Now he solemnly intoned his five hundred by ones; and when he reached the half-thousand mark it occurred to him to add another stately hundred for good measure. There are times when it pays to be on the safe side.

At last he cleared his throat. Gingerly he reached for the bandage that darkened his vision. He lifted it almost timidly, for well he knew that Pooch's threats of wallops on the bean were not empty nothingnesses. For a moment he blinked dazedly at the sudden brightness of the sunlight. Then, still blinking, he made out that he was standing alone in what seemed to be the center of an interminable forest of scrub oak, one of those endless pancake stretches of inhospitable trees, too large to mow and too small to hew, which the real-estate prospectuses of Long Island always tactfully ignore. Salt blinked some more; then he began to think.

It was still morning, of course. It must have been about dawn when he was blindfolded and marched away from that terrible boat. Since then he had been prodded, so it seemed, for many miles. Pooch had been one of the gang that so rudely jostled him; Pooch and Doc and the one they called Swede and two or three others. Now and then he had sensed the hard surface of a highway underfoot, and twice cars had actually brushed by him. He had thought of calling out, but had recollected in time the ceremony of the wallop on the bean. Silence, he had learned, was a golden thing. He had been wheeled around with his back to each passing car. Perhaps that was why the drivers had not noticed his blindfold and suspected something queer. Well, that didn't matter.

If it was still morning, as it must be, then the sun was in the east. He faced it. To the left somewhere must lie the Sound. He must bear north.

He started forcing his way through the brush. A ragged branch whipped his face and stung him. He put his hand instinctively to his cheek and winced at the touch.

In ducking under the next branch he happened to glance at his feet. He jerked upright, stared at them. Merciful heavens! And he had totally forgotten it! The shoes he saw were not shoes at all; certainly they were not the type of footwear a gentleman would or could properly wear on a cross-country tour of a Long Island briar patch. They were soft and they were long and they were pointed, but most of all, in spite of the mud that caked them, they were of a glorious cardinal red. His eyes crawled in horror up his legs. They were snugly encased in bright red tights, silk tights, somewhat torn and also mudstained, but glaringly, unmistakably red. The eyes of Saltonstall Cabot Adams widened in horror; his jaw sagged limp. Here he was in the middle of uncharted Long Island, without a penny—for he had no pocket—and without a friend, dressed for the day in the doublet and hose of an Elizabethan courtier, doublet and hose torn and mud-smeared, but recognizable to even the most untutored eye as the garments either of an escaped lunatic or of a fancy dress ball gone very wrong indeed.

Salt sat down weakly just where he was. Then he felt something bulky inside his shirt, fumbled for it with suddenly trembling hands, and slowly pulled out into the sunlight the long, shimmering coil of hair that had once graced the head of Connemara. He dangled it in front of him, looking at it unsteadily. He had kept that at least, through all the fighting. His eye brightened, but his teeth closed together grimly. Find Connemara! That was it. What did anything else matter? He must find Connemara.

He leaped to his feet and started plunging through the brush, the long lock of auburn hair clutched in his right hand. He came upon the road so suddenly that he was half-way across it before he realized it was there. Even as he checked himself he saw a motorcycle coming toward him. He watched it fascinated. Then suddenly he recognized the broad-brimmed hat, the dark gray shirt, and the bright purple necktie of a trooper of the New York State Police.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

— By Blanche Silver —

DOTTY MEETS AN INTERESTING LITTLE WORKER.

"Well, good morning, Mrs. Butterfly," cried Dotty, as she spied the pretty winged creature sitting on the rose bush, "You better run back to shelter, for it's surely going to rain."

"My goodness," answered the winged creature, "and here I thought it was evening and that I had overslept. Isn't it evening-time?"

"No, indeed, little Butterfly," laughed Dotty. "This is a cloudy day."

"You see, I'm Mrs Butterfly's cousin, Mrs. Moth," said the winged creature. "I come out only an cloudy days or in the evening. I thought, since the sky is dark, it must be evening. My, but I'm the happiest little mother in all this great meadowland. Have you seen my babies?"

"I've seen some tiny butterflies sailing around, but I didn't dream they —," began Dotty, when Mrs. Moth laughed merrily and, beckoning her to follow, led Dotty over to the mulberry tree.

"You never saw my babies flying around," she declared proudly, "for they are not old enough to fly. Here we are. See those tiny, black worms, so full they look as if their very skins would burst? These little youngsters are just about five days old now. See those eight little legs, Dotty? They will take hold of the limb of the tree and wait until their skins burst. It will take about two days to do that."

"How many times do they have

to change their clothes before they are full grown, like you are?" asked Dotty. She could hardly believe the little black worms would ever become pretty Moths.

"They must change their suits at least four or five times," replied Mrs. Moth. "The last time they moult, as we call it, they are creamy white and as smooth as can be. Then they will find the proper place, hang themselves up and spin lovely peanut-shaped cocoons around themselves. Let's see—it takes just about three days to complete the cocoon; then in about seven days the worm turns into a chrysalis; then after a sleep and growth of about fifteen days, out will come a lovely, snow-white Moth. I was snow-white once, myself, but the dusts and damp weather have made my white suit look grey. Did you know, Dotty, that my babies are the spinners of the silk from which your silk dresses and hair ribbons are made?"

"But how in the world—?" began Dotty, when Mrs. Moth interrupted her again.

"Where cocoons are raised for that purpose," said Mrs. Moth, "the cocoons are placed in a hot oven, or in something filled with hot steam, so they tell me. It must take hundreds of them to make one yard of silk." Then the moth continued, "I'm glad my family don't have to go through that. We are free to fly around, and that reminds me, the sun is out and I must get some sleep. Good-by, Dotty; don't let anything harm my babies."

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

FRIDAY, JANUARY 8.

Although a lively day may be expected, according to the ruling stellar activities, yet there are certain indications of obstruction and difficult financial problems. There may be sudden changes of hostile purport, and a general undercurrent to thwart the ambitions. Still, tact and keen judgment will obviate this situation. Letters and publishings should respond to this clever manipulation.

Those whose birthday it is may encounter a year in which to demonstrate their clever abilities, which they have in abundance. They should shun abrupt change and be careful in the matter of finance. In heart and home relations it might be well to be on guard against deception or fraud. A child born on this day may be blessed with good abilities, being ambitious and equipped to reach for its ideals despite obstacles and a rather restless temperament.

FAMOUS FORTUNES

By Barbara Bayne

CYRUS HALL McCORMICK—THE "REAPER KING."

On a Virginia farm, in 1809, was born the man whose inventive genius was destined to make the United States a great wheat exporting nation, and enrich it hundreds of millions of dollars. Cyrus Hall McCormick, whose reaping machine brought him world-wide fame and great wealth, was the son of Robert McCormick, a gentleman farmer whose ancestors had hailed from Scotland. He, too, was something of a genius and was always inventing something which refused to work according to expectations, but which later furnished helpful hints to Cyrus in perfecting his own inventions.

At Fifteen He Invented a Cradle to Aid in Harvesting.

The lad early realized the need of better agricultural implements, and at the age of fifteen invented a cradle which was successfully used on the family's farm. Followed a self-sharpening plow. Then, when he was only twenty-four, Cyrus hauled his "reaping machine" into a field for its first trial—and it worked! He remedied a defect and the next year harvested 60 acres.

Cyrus obtained his first patent that year—1834—but continued to incorporate many new inventions, some of which his brother, Leander, contributed. Young McCormick removed to Cincinnati, then to Chicago in 1847, when he commenced to manufacture the reaper. His success inspired others but the McCormick reaping machine outdistanced all competitors, here and abroad.

In 1851 it won first prize in London and in 1855 the coveted Gold Medal in Paris, where its inventor sold one to Napoleon III.

By 1871 the McCormick Reaper Works, the first great manufacturing concern in America, was turning out 10,000 a year. Then the Chicago fire destroyed the entire plant. It was rebuilt and running at top speed within two years.

About that time the reaper was supplemented with mowers, droppers and the Withington Self-Binders. To-day the International Harvester Company, which succeeded the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, has 94 branch plants in the United States and 17 in Canada, it controls 4 iron ore mines in Minnesota, 2 coke works and coal mines in Kentucky and Illinois. Furnaces and steel mills in Illinois, timber lands and sawmills in Missouri and Mississippi, and a 3,000-acre plantation in Cuba.

Cyrus McCormick had many terrific legal battles over the infringement of his patents. He was a determined fighter for his rights. It was in the celebrated harvester case in 1865 that Lincoln won his first counsel fees—$1,000—though McCormick had a brilliant array of opposing counsel.

He had a magnificent residence in Chicago and a fine estate in New York. Cyrus McCormick, the "Reaper King," died in Chicago in 1884.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SOLVING CROSS-WORD PUZZLES

Start out by filling in the words of which you feel reasonably sure. These will give you a clue to other words crossing them, and they in turn to still others. A letter belongs in each white space, words starting at the numbered squares and running either horizontally or vertically or both.

Solution will appear in to-morrow's paper.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D., Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

Have you worked out the best bath rules for your individual health and beauty?

This is an important question, for the best baths for certain people vary with the physique of the people. If you do not react favorably after a cold bath, that is if you do not expecience a feeling of brisk invigoration with a warm glow as the reaction from contact with the chilly water, you may be one of those persons who should not indulge in the cold bath. However, do not excuse yourself from this health-giving bath without being sure, for there is nothing so exhilarating as the feeling of briskness and health when you emerge from the cold water. In fact, many devotees insist that the feeling of strength and invigoration stays with them all day.

If you have reason to doubt that the cold bath is good for you, you may settle this question by consulting your doctor. If you have never indulged in the cold dip, you may have to school yourself for the experience at first.

Now I am going to tell you a very good way to make the cold plunge in the tub less of a shock.

Have your cold bath ready. Before you step in, gather up some of the cold water in the palms of your two hands and dash it all over your face and neck. Repeat this several times. You will find that this contact with the water prepares you for your immersion in the tub, and that you do not mind the first shock of it so much. Really, when you become accustomed to this, you can look forward to your baths with real pleasure. The use of cold water on your face make the first step into the tub much less of an ordeal.

If you take the cold bath every morning, you will have to take your warm bath, for the purposes of cleanliness, several times a week, at night

Take this bath before you get into bed. Let it be merely good and warm, not hot, and you will be in less danger of taking cold. In fact, you would make no mistake to follow it by a cold rinse.

Once you get the daily cold bath habit, you should find that your tendency to Winter cold vanishes. Try this method of bathing out for the sake of health and beauty.

Mr. Bertrand Monk returned to Detroit on Monday after a month's visit with friends in the village.

Mr. Geo McCartney of Peterboro was a visitor to the village on Monday afternoon.

Service in the United church Sunday evening was well attended and was as usual in charge of the pastor, Rev. A. Poulter. His subject was "The Church and the Call to Service." He chose for his text the passages found in the 5th chapter of St. Matthew, 13-16 verses.

The week of prayer called for this week has been postponed until next week owing to unforseen circumstances arising since last announcement.

The Sunday school of the United church has a splendid attendance on Sunday with every teacher present with the class. The orchestra led in the music and a number of New Year's hymns were sung heartily by the whole school. This was a very encouraging beginning for the new year.

PUBLISHER SAYS AD RATE TOO LOW

Adolph Ochus, of New York Times, Believes Raise Would Improve Paper.

NEW YORK, January 7. — Canadian Press. — Asserting that the existing advertising rates are too low, Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, yesterday told advertising men at a luncheon of the Advertising Club, that every issue of the Times cost the owners approximately 14 cents a copy.

Mr. Ochs said that the present advertising rates tend to cheapen newspapers and expressed the belief that higher rates would improve the contents of the advertisements, because the advertisers would improve their advertising.

ECLIPSE FASHIONS

Exclusive Patterns by Hazel Bryan

A Smart Example of The Flare

Satin once more asserts its charm and lends its lustre to the graceful lines of this afternoon frock, whose slim bodice more than meets its match in a full rippling tunic. Fastening at the front beneath a tie, and molded to the figure, the distinguishing feature of this charming model is the circular set-on flounce dropping to form a V at the center front. The sleeves are long and tight, flaring softly over the hand. The front and back of this frock are plain and in one piece, the flounce being finished separately and joined to the dress after it is made up. The diagram shows just how the pieces go together, and No. 1251 is in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Size 36 bust requires 5¼ yards 36-inch, or 3¾ yards 54-inch material. Price 20 cents.

Many styles of smart apparel may be found in our new Fashion Book. Our designers originate their patterns in the heart of the style centers, and their creations are those of tested popularity, brought within the means of the average woman. Price of the book 10 cents the copy.

G.K.F.—You are an indifferent observer, and slow to grasp or comprehend the nature of what you see and hear. You have, however, good ability to copy when you set your mind to the task, your hands being ready and your mind retentive. The quality of observativeness may be developed by assiduous practice, and you should make an endeavor to correct this fault which will prove a handicap to you all through life. You have a certain charm of manner, but keep it mostly for your close friends. To others, you are almost discourteous. Your colors are brown and gray. You were born on a Tuesday.

R.T.—You are sociable, affectionate, warm-hearted, and will be interested in the company of friends. You have a good share of attachment, but can change friendship if circumstances require it. Your mental perceptions appear to be sluggish, either due to lack of use or physical disorders. Bad habits and unwise ways of living react on the mental manifestations quickly and surely. You should immediately examine yourself and find whether redemption is still possible. Your colors are green and cream; you were born on a Friday.

S.O.—You have splendid perception of relative size and eye-measuring powers; can judge correctly by the eye the size, length, width, etc. of articles with which you or others work. Do not allow yourself to worry over disproportion, but concentrate on more immediate and more important things. Your mentality is acute and your reasoning powers first rate. Your great need in life is a definite goal, and until you have this you will not progress far. Your color is brown. You were born on a Friday.

N.E.S.—You care little for popularity, censure, or praise, and are equally callous to the feelings of others. It does not do to be too thin-skinned, but one should remember the vulnerability of others and show compassion. You have great powers of perception, and prefer to do things your own way. You would, with creative talent, be successful in inventions. Good music may act as an antidote for that grouchiness you manifest. Avail yourself of every opportunity to mix with others in happy company. Your color is cream.

Soy.—The principal indication in your reading is one of run-down physical condition, shown through a correspondingly weakened mentality. You have good fundamental powers, principally in planning and finance, but these are useless if the vitality is not there to push your plans to maturity. Ease up on whatever is exhausting you, take care of your health. You have a great regard for the best in singing, though not yourself a singer. Overcome self-consciousness if you would gain the greatest measure of success. Your color is purple. You were born on a Monday.

S.N.—You are so straight that you are likely to fall backward. You are governed by a high order of moral principle; are honest and upright in all your dealings; make too little allowances for the weakness of human nature. This high moral code of yours has brought you one great sorrow, already. Don't you think you might relax, just a point or two? Be less censorious; forbear and forgive; temper justice with charity and mercy. You have had a full measure of success in life, and stand high in the estimation of your fellows, but have few real friends. You were born on a Wednesday.

L.A.S.—You are inclined to build too many castles in the air, and live too much in the future are very sanguine, happy, buoyant, enterprising, and speculative; seldom get half you expected, therefore are frequently being disappointed; so far your hopes have exceeded your realizations. Do not make promises you are not certain you can fulfil. You have a good capacity for tracing effects to their causes, but seldom bother. Come to earth. You are young yet, and can travel a long way toward success. Your color is mauve. You were born on a Thursday.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

TELLING OF AN ULTRA SMART EVENING FROCK.

So many of the young debutantes are among Madame's smart clients that she has been kept busy all season designing dainty, youthful party frocks.

One mother came in with her young daughter today to look at the new models that have been added to the collection in the past few weeks. The mother explained to Madame:

"When I got so many frocks for Marjorie in the beginning of the season I thought she would be well supplied till Spring, but the parties come so thick and fast that she simply wears out all her dresses."

Marjorie is young and pretty, with fair complexion and dark hair, and she looks well in almost any color at all.

Madame has made her pastel frocks and vivid colored frocks, and today she consulted the client herself as to what color she would like. Marjorie said:

"There's something fascinating about every pink frock I see, and I'd love another pink one."

Madame dispatched one of the saleswomen to have a manikin model the newest pink frock, and I was the manikin chosen.

The newest frock is a love, I think, and I am showing a sketch of it here.

The pale pink georgette has insets of narrow silver lace. There are horizontal tucks and the edge of every other tuck is stitched with narrow silver thread.

Of course Marjorie liked the delicate colors and the straight-line simplicity of the frock as soon as she saw it, and there was nothing to do but have the model copied immediately.

Majorie also selected a rose-pink fan from a number Madame is showing in the downstairs salon.

This Pale Pink Georgette Gown Is Trimmed with Bands of Silver Lace.

Hungarian Democrats Say Fascisti Tried to Aid Albrecht to Throne.

FORGED NOTES.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Hungarian social democrats are making all possible political capital out of the thirty billion franc note case. They charge that the notes were forged by Fascisti to finance a movement to install Archduke Albrecht on the throne, and that for this reason, Prefect of Police Nadossy, who, like Admiral Horthy, the Regent, is a supporter of Albrecht, did all in his power to frustrate the investigations and further, that it was only the threat of the French Government to break diplomatic relations that brought him to his senses.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7. (Canadian Press).—A sharp earthquake was felt in the San Francisco Bay region at 9.54 o'clock last night. Two distinct shocks, lasting about five seconds, were felt in Oakland, while San Francisco and points south along the peninsula received a sharp shock.

ONCE UPON A TIME ONE-EYE, TWO-EYES AND THREE-EYES—I by W. J. ENRIGHT.

THERE WAS ONCE A WOMAN WHO HAD THREE DAUGHTERS. THE OLDEST WAS CALLED ONE-EYE, BECAUSE SHE HAD ONLY ONE EYE, WHICH WAS RIGHT IN THE MIDDLE OF HER FOREHEAD. THE SECOND WAS CALLED TWO-EYES, BECAUSE SHE HAD TWO EYES LIKE OTHER PEOPLE. THE YOUNGEST WAS CALLED THREE-EYES. HER THIRD EYE, LIKE THE SINGLE ONE OF HER ELDER SISTER, WAS IN THE MIDDLE OF HER FOREHEAD. NEITHER THE MOTHER NOR THE SISTERS LOVED POOR TWO-EYES, JUST BECAUSE SHE WAS LIKE OTHER PEOPLE.

ONE DAY TWO-EYES WAS SENT OUT TO TEND THE GOAT AND BEING VERY HUNGRY SHE SAT DOWN AND BEGAN TO CRY. IN THE MIDST OF HER GRIEF SHE LOOKED UP AND SAW A WOMAN BESIDE HER WHO ASKED, "WHAT ARE YOU CRYING FOR, TWO-EYES?" © McClure Newspaper Syndicate

TWO-EYES ANSWERED, "BECAUSE MY MOTHER AND SISTERS HATE ME. THEY MAKE ME WEAR THEIR OLD CLOTHES AND ONLY GIVE ME THE SCRAPS OF FOOD THEY LEAVE. TODAY THEY HAVE GIVEN ME SO LITTLE I AM [illegible] AS I CAN BE." TOMORROW: DELICIOUS FOOD.

Grain Prices Fluctuate Within Narrow Limits

CHICAGO, Jan. 7. — (Canadian Press).—With trade light and with European markets unresponsive to yesterday's advance, wheat averaged lower in price here to-day during the early dealings. Reports were circulated that the crop in Northern Argentina has not been the complete failure which it had been made out to be, and that the crop in South Argentina is turning out well. However, the demand for wheat tended to broaden somewhat. The opening which ranged from 3-8 to 7-8c down, new style, May 1.80 to 1.80¼, and July 1.54 7-8 to 1.55, was followed by numerous fluctuations within the limits of about 1⅛ cents.

Scantiness of country offerings to arrive gave firmness to the corn market. After opening 1-8 to 3-8c higher, May 87¼ to 87 3-8, corn scored moderate further gains.

Oats were steadied by corn strength, starting at a shade to 1-8 to ¼c higher, May 45 7-8 to 46c. Oats held near to the initial figures.

Heavy Trading In Mines With Argonaut Outstanding

TORONTO, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—A number of stocks scored substantial gains in the heavy trading on the Standard Mining Exchange this morning. Argonaut was outstanding both in strength and activity, advancing 2 1-2 points at 20 1-2 in a turnover of more than 100,000 shares, a third of the morning's total. Capitol, also heavily dealt in, improved half a point at 37 1-2. McIntyre climbed 40 at 23.35, Teck Hughes eight at 2.88, Nipissing 35 at 7.10, Hollinger 20 at 18.50, Dome 20 at 16.20, and Vipond one at 171. West Dome Lake was moved up to 23 1-2, but closed the morning half a point lower at 22. Tough Oakes last 1 1-2 at 53, and Hunton and Canadian Lorrain, both very active, also sold slightly lower.

Strength Of Smelters Featured Toronto Market

TORONTO, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).The strength and activity of Consolidated Smelters and a general advance in mines were features of this morning's session of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Smelters advanced three and three-quarter points to 188 3-4, closing the morning only a quarter point below the high mark after opening with an overnight gain of two points.

In the mines the heavily-dealt-in Nipissing climbed to 7.45 closing at 7.10 for a 25 cent gain; McIntyre jumped 70 to 21.50, and Dome and Hollinger were each 30 points higher at the morning close than yesterday. Crow' Nest was another strong spot in the active list, advancing one at 52, and Canadian Oil gained two at 67.

Abitibi, C.P.R. and City Dairy were also stronger. Brompton was the outstanding weak spot, being marked a point and a half lower at 26 1-2. Steel of Canada lost a point. Brazilian opened strong and was fairly heavily dealt in, but it closed the morning an eighth lower.

Stock Prices Moved Up With Call Money Plentiful

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Stock prices moved upward today on the subsidence of the recent selling pressure and the resumption of pool operations on a broad scale. Call money was again in plentiful supply the stock exchange official rate ruling around four per cent. butou tside funds being available as low as 3 1-4. Stiffening gasoline and crude oil prices and expectation of a formal announcement of the Barns-Dall-Waite Phillips-Simms merger early next week revived speculative interest in the oil shares. Merger reports also stimulated activity in the rails.

PRICE OF SPUDS DOWN IN CHICAGO

Canadian Product, Duty Paid, Rivalling Domestic Potatoes.

CAUSED DECREASE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7 — (Canadian Press).—Up to date, 1,370 carloads of Canadian potatoes, duty paid, have rivalled the domestic potatoes, it is officially stated here, and after outdoing all recent high price records, the humble spuds are taking a graceful curve downward again a little nearer to the ordinary pocketbook level.

A fifty per cent. increase of potato shipments in the last week appears to be responsible.

The management of Brock Street Rink desire to thank the patrons on the east side for the very fine manner in which they refrained from smoking at the last hockey game, and trust the same observance to rules will be given to-morrow night when there is likely to be a very large crowd. The Toronto Players Have Agreed To Be on Ice at 8.30 Sharp.

Theatre

AT THE CAPITOL

LEOPARD BATTLES SCREEN PLAYERS

Doris Kenyon, Hughes and Big Cast Here in "Half Way Girl."

Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes now claim rank among the top-notchers in "sailordom" as well as in filmdom. They base their claim on experiences in their latest First National feature, "The Half Way Girl," which begins at the Capitol Theatre, commencing today.

First of all, after various exciting adventures on land, they find themselves on a 4,000 ton ocean liner, which is destroyed by fire, and from which they escape, only to find themselves sharing a small lifeboat with a snarling leopard. After a terrific struggle, they overcome this danger, too.

Fate, however, not satisfied with reel thrills for movie actors, decided to top off all these screen adventures with a real thrill for the two young players. For when Miss Kenyon and Hughes, together with the rest of the company of "The Half Way Girl," boarded their ship, one of the engine cylinders exploded as they were leaving New York harbor. A real fire broke out later after the vessel, following repairs, put out to sea.

"The Half Way Girl" was directed by John Francis Dillon, under supervision of Earl Hudson, producer of "Flaming Youth," "So Big," "Chickie" and "The Lost World." The action takes place in and around Singapore, Straits Settlements.

The cast includes Hobart Bosworth, Sam Hardy, Tully Marshall, Teddy Sampson and Sally Crute.

AT THE REGENT

TOM MIX HAS GREATEST CAST IN THRILLING SCREEN VERSION OF BRAND'S "BEST BAD MAN."

Tom Mix, Fox Film's star, will be the attraction at the Regent theatre to-day, beginning a three day's run. "The Best Bad Man" is Toms latest film offering and he is supported by Clara Bow and one of the best casts ever assembled in a Mix production.

The latest offering is the screen version of Max Brand's novel and many of the thrilling scenes are laid in Colorado. Mix, as a rich property owned, goes west in an attempt to settle the difficulties into which he has been plunged by his western manager.

The cast includes Tom Wilson, famous for his characterizations, and Cyril Chadwick, "genteel heavy," who with Tom Kennedy, causes all the trouble. Other members of the cast include Judy King, inimitable comedy flapper; Frank Beal, veteran character delineator; Paul Panzer, famous for his striking work in "The Fool," and other well known Fox actors.

Tony has his usual big moments, and some of the most thrilling sequences ever photographed are seen when Mix makes a daring rescue of Miss Bow.

J. G. Blystone, who handled the megaphone for some of Toms best releases, directed "The Best Bad Man."

Grain Prices Fluctuate Within Narrow Limits

CHICAGO, Jan. 7. — (Canadian Press).—With trade light and with European markets unresponsive to yesterday's advance, wheat averaged lower in price here to-day during the early dealings. Reports were circulated that the crop in Northern Argentina has not been the complete failure which it had been made out to be, and that the crop in South Argentina is turning out well. However, the demand for wheat tended to broaden somewhat. The opening which ranged from 3-8 to 7-8c down, new style, May 1.80 to 1.80¼, and July 1.54 7-8 to 1.55, was followed by numerous fluctuations within the limits of about 1½ cents.

Scantiness of country offerings to arrive gave firmness to the corn market. After opening 1-8 to 3-8c higher, May 87¼ to 87 3-8, corn scored moderate further gains.

Oats were steadied by corn strength, starting at a shade to 1-8 to ¼c higher, May 45 7-8 to 46c. Oats held near to the initial figures.

Heavy Trading In Mines With Argonaut Outstanding

TORONTO, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—A number of stocks scored substantial gains in the heavy trading on the Standard Mining Exchange this morning. Argonaut was outstanding both in strength and activity, advancing 2 1-2 points at 20 1-2 in a turnover of more than 100,000 shares, a third of the morning's total. Capitol, also heavily dealt in, improved half a point at 37 1-2. McIntyre climbed 40 at 23.35, Teck Hughes eight at 2.88, Nipissing 35 at 7.10, Hollinger 20 at 18.50, Dome 20 at 16.20, and Vipond one at 171. West Dome Lake was moved up to 23 1-2, but closed the morning half a point lower at 22. Tough Oakes last 1 1-2 at 53, and Hunton and Canadian Lorrain, both very active, also sold slightly lower.

Strength Of Smelters Featured Toronto Market

TORONTO, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).The strength and activity of Consolidated Smelters and a general advance in mines were features of this morning's session of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Smelters advanced three and three-quarter points to 188 3-4, closing the morning only a quarter point below the high mark after opening with an overnight gain of two points.

In the mines the heavily-dealt-in Nipissing climbed to 7.45 closing at 7.10 for a 25 cent gain; McIntyre jumped 70 to 21.50, and Dome and Hollinger were each 30 points higher at the morning close than yesterday. Crow' Nest was another strong spot in the active list, advancing one at 52, and Canadian Oil gained two at 67.

Abitibi, C.P.R. and City Dairy were also stronger. Brompton was the outstanding weak spot, being marked a point and a half lower at 26 1-2. Steel of Canada lost a point. Brazilian opened strong and was fairly heavily dealt in, but it closed the morning an eighth lower.

Stock Prices Moved Up With Call Money Plentiful

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Stock prices moved upward today on the subsidence of the recent selling pressure and the resumption of pool operations on a broad scale. Call money was again in plentiful supply the stock exchange official rate ruling around four per cent. butou tside funds being available as low as 3 1-4. Stiffening gasoline and crude oil prices and expectation of a formal announcement of the Barns-Dall-Waite Phillips-Simms merger early next week revived speculative interest in the oil shares. Merger reports also stimulated activity in the rails.

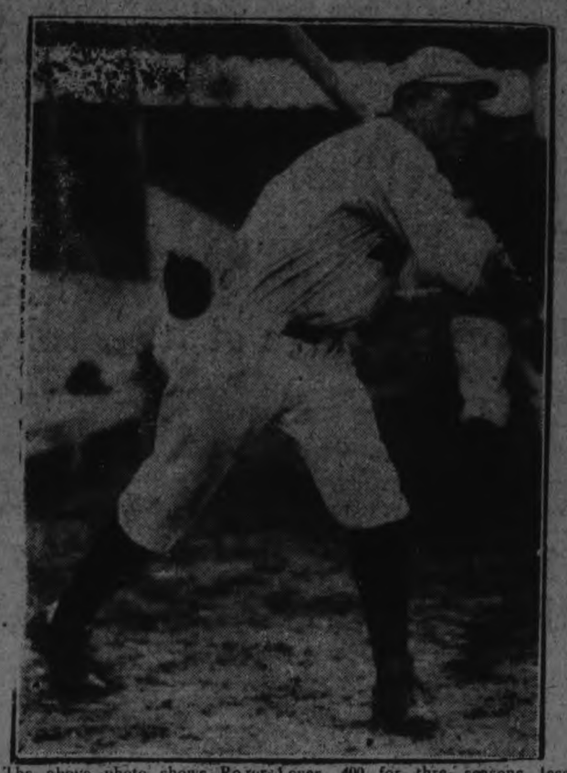
CHAMPION BATTLER IN ACTION



The above photo shows Rogers Hornsby, the 1925 champion batter. For the sixth successive time Hornsby finished on top of the National League batting heap for the year 1925. His mark of .403 also made him one of the only three men to hit over .400 for three seasons, Jesse Burkett and Ty Cobb being the others. Heilman led the American League with a mark of .393, ten points lower than Hornsby, which makes the latter the champion batter of the major leagues.

Apply for Franchise in National Professional League.

TO USE PARK

BOSTON, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press) — The Boston Braves have applied for a franchise in the National Professional Football League and plans, if successful, to place a salaried eleven in the field for the next two season, Secretary Edwin Riley announced yesterday.

The project was planned partly as an economic addition to the Braves' Field baseball park, Riley said, as the leaders of the National League club hoped to make up for many months of baseball idleness by filling the stands in the fall and winter months.

The Braves are the first major league club to throw its lot in with professional football although the New York Giants last season lent their name and grounds to a club promoted by outside interests.

COLDS THAT DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action, it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ON LENGLEN'S TRAIL.

Helen Wills Doubtful of Winning.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Reiterating her hope that the trip would bring forth a match with Suzanne Lenglen but expressing doubt that she would be able to conquer the European titleholder, Helen Wills, national women's tennis champion, yesterday embarked with her mother on the steamer DeGrasse for France.

Although as many as 150,000 people have attended football games and other athletic contests at the famous Wembley Stadium at one time, the terraces are made of concrete only one and a half inches thick.

DUNSFORD RINK WON AT LINDSAY

Defeated Larry O'Connor 9-6 in Major Curling Contest.

TORONTO BEATEN.

LINDSAY, Jan. 7—Dunsford and Larry O'Connor's strong Lindsay rink battled last evening in the final game in the local bonspiel for the Victoria Trust and Loan Co. trophy and individual prizes. The visitors won out by the score of 9-6.

A feature of the main competition yesterday was the defeat of the strong Lakeview (Toronto) rink by the Dunsford quartette.

Skip Moore of Keene, had been sailing along very nicely in the main competition, when he was beaten out by Larry O'Connor yesterday morning to the tune of 9-13.

Regret was expressed that Peterboro rinks cancelled their entries owing to ice conditions.

The consolation event will be concluded today. Skip Moore, of Keene, is the only outside representative in this event.

NO DISAGREEMENT ON GOLF BALL SIZE

U. S. Recommendations Not Rejected By the British.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Denying that a larger and lighter golf ball recommended by the United States Golf Association has been rejected by British officials, W. Norman Boase, chairman of the championship committee of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrew's, yesterday asserted that there was "no difference of opinion" on the subject between the ruling links organizations of Britain and the United States.

Mr. Boase declared that the Royal and Ancient Club had not approved the suggestion that the new ball be played exclusively in 1926 championship events in both countries. It was deemed unfair, he said, to use the championship tournaments for experimental purposes.

The proposal of the U.S.G.A. would increase the diameter of the present ball from 1.62 inches to 1.68 inches, while its weight would be reduced from 1.62 ounces to 1.55.

HOCKEY PROSPECTS ARE GOOD AT MENIE

Rink is Being Erected at Hoards, So Team is Discussed.

BURNBRAE, Jan. 7.—The mild weather of the last few days has been hard on ice, and local skaters have been compelled to give up some of their plans.

Some of the leading sportsmen at Hoards have purchased the open-air rink at Stirling and are erecting it on the lot adjoining Brown's blacksmith shop. The rink will be equipped with electric lights and should prove a very desirable community centre when cold weather sets in once more.

The proximity of a good rink has already started speculation regarding a hockey team at Menie. In the days before the war Menie had a team that could hold its own with any of the local Trent Valley towns. Thos. Weatherill was centre ice man and captain, with Wm. Stewart, Wm. Hume and Ernest Eagleson with him on the forward line. Thos. Hume and Will Lamb formed the rear-guard, with Linton Shillinglaw between the posts. These last three served with distinction overseas, Lamb dying as a result of injuries upon his return to Canada, while Shillinglaw was badly wounded. He is now at Healey Falls, and Thomas Hume owns a farm at Cobourg. A younger generation now aspires to hockey fame under the Menie colors. Wm. Hume and E. Eagleson are still going strong, and although not as speedy as in 1914, their stick-handling and wicked shots still make them first-class performers. The stars of the team, Leslie Shillinglaw, defence, and Carl Johnson, wing, are working at Campbellford and might not be able to play regularly. These two are considered good enough for any intermediate team. Jack Rannie and Ralph Hay, the other defence prospects, are both fast, tireless skaters and with experience should prove a veritable stone-wall. Alex. Linn, S. Hobbs and C. Little are all good forwards, Linn being a speed demon and something of an acrobat on skates. The crying need of the outfit is a real good net-minder, and any one aspiring to this position should get into training at once. The last appearance of the local boys was in the Town League some three years ago when they were right in the running at the time the league disbanded. Two good forwards have been lost since then, Will Brady and Don Craighead, former High School stars, going to Hamilton and Queen's, Kingston, respectively.

The community looks forward with interest to further developments in the hockey situation.

CARPENTIER WAS NOTABLE ON SHIP

Divided Interest With Jugoslav Minister.

CHERBOURG, France, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist, and M. Stoyadinovitch, the Jugoslav Minister of Finance, divided the interest of the passengers boarding the steamship Majestic bound for New York yesterday. But the French boxer apparently scored heavily in public favor over the Minister plenipotentiary.

A majority of the crowds at the pier seemed much more impressed with the pugilist's personal business trip to the United States than with the Jugoslav Minister's mission to arrange a settlement of the Jugoslavian debt to the United States. Nearly every one was asking to have Carpentier pointed out, while the Minister was merely the centre of a small group of diplomats and financiers, with a few casual observers.

"I may fight, and I may not,' said Carpentier. "If I do not fight myself I will probably arrange a fight for someone else." This was interpreted to mean Paolino, the Spanish heavyweight.

SCORELESS GAME

DUNSFORD, Jan. 7.—The first game of hockey for the season was played on Monday night between the juniors and the seniors. They played a fast game but the juniors had plenty of dash and succeeded in holding them to score of 0-0.

The curlers have been taking advantage of the ice this last week. One rink from here entered the Lindsay bonspiel which began Tuesday.

HOCKEY SEASON OPEN TO-NIGHT

Campbellford Entertains Hastings In T. V. League Opener.

PLAN TOWN LEAGUE.

CAMPBELLFORD, Jan. 7.—The lid will be pried off the hockey season at Covert's Arena to-night, when the fast Hastings team will be the attraction. Hastings have lost their star defence man, "Dit" Clapper, but will provide plenty of opposition with "Scotty" Clapper, Stevenson Gould, Hill and others. Hill was one of the most popular players that ever sportred a Campbellford uniform, and will be sure of a warm welcome from local fans. Manager "Norm." Heayn has three goal-tenders in Stewart, Fox and Bush, with first choice likely going to Stewart. Jack Cowell, McArthur and Luckam are possibilities for defence, and Blue, Wood, Parsons, Flint and others for forwards. Hockey fans who are interested in the welfare of the local boys should attend the opening game and encourage them in their efforts to provide clean, wholesome sport.

The Town Hockey League is being revived, and a meeting will be held next week to elect officers, draft a schedule, and attend to other matters of importance. An evenly balanced four-team group is being counted upon. The Clerks, Hydro, and Campbellford Cloth are sure starters. If the High School players decide they will have enough hockey in the Intercollegiate: the Outlaws will form the fourth entry.

EVELYN N. THAW WANTS TO LIVE

Doctor Reports She May Recover From Dose of Poison.

SON WITH HER.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.— Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who on Tuesday attempted suicide by taking poison, last night was described as "not dying, but mighty close to it" in a statement by Dr. Amanti Rongetti, head of the hospital where she is a patient.

Dr. Rongetti said her temperature had been reduced to normal, but that he was dissatisfied with the rapid heart action and that a skin eruption, traced to the effect of the poison she swallowed, has developed.

Russell Thaw, her 15 year old son, who was with her when she attempted suicide and aided in saving her life by giving her an antidote and rushing her to a hospital, prepared yesterday to return to Atlantic tCity where he attends school. Mrs. Thaw's mother is expected here in a day or two.

The motive for her attempt to end her life was still unexplained yesterday. It was admitted that she had been drinking heavily since New Year's, but Mrs. Thaw told doctors that her act was "no one's business," although she added that it was done on the impulse of the moment. She said that she now wanted to live, but she was lethargic and manifested little interest in what went on about her.

GAMES POSTPONED LAKESHORE GROUP

Bowmanville Leads in Both Intermediate and Junior Groups.

OSHAWA, Jan. 7.—Out of the first six games scheduled in Section "C" of the Intermediate group No. 1 three have been postponed. Port Hope, with a new rink, have been unable to secure ice, and the Cobourg at Port Hope and Bowmanville at Port Hope games were called off, while the Cobourg at Oshawa fixture was postponed on account of soft ice. Ginger Edger's Bowmanville puck chasers are out in front in the group race to date with two straight wins, one at home from Oshawa and one on the road at Cobourg; Pete Darch's Port home brews hold second place, winning their only start at Oshawa; Kent Payne's Cobourg squad are in third place with one loss, while Oshawa occupies the cellar position with two straight losses. The following is the complete standing to date with the goals scored for and against:

	Won	Lost	Goals For	Agst.
Bowmanville	2	0	8	1
Port Hope	1	0	4	3
Cobourg	0	1	1	6
Oshawa	0	2	3	6

Out of the four junior games scheduled in this group, one has been postponed, Cobourg at Port Hpe. Bowmanville and Cobourg Crescents are sitting pretty at the top, each having turned in a win on home ice, Bowmanville winning an overtime struggle with Oshawa by 5 to 4, while Cobourg defeated Whitby 3 to 2; Oshawa lies in third place with one loss at Bowmanville, and a win from Port Hope in the Motor City by 8 to 2; Port Hope has the cellar position with a loss to Oshawa. The following is the complete standing of teams to date with goals scored for and against:

	Won	Lost	Goals For	Agst.
Bowmanville	1	0	5	4
Cobourg	1	0	3	2
Oshawa	1	1	12	7
Port Hope	0	1	2	8

Eastern Ontario hockey fans are watching the ex-Peterboro boy, "Mickey" Murray, who is with Galt, and "Gunner" Arnott, formerly of Belleville, located in Preston, and both are earning extra meal tickets via the overtime route. Both boys wore hockey uniforms in a ninety-minute struggle on Tuesday evening. 'Mickey' has been in pads in five games, four of which he has served with sixty minutes extra.

Port Hope, without having had skates on for the season, stepped into Oshawa on New Year's night and banded Oshawa a four to three lacing. The Oshawa fans are now wondering if the double schedule adopted for the first time in the local intermediate group will be a financial success.

After the display of Oshawa juniors in the overtime game at Bowmanville, when they were beaten by five to four, and the win from Port Hope at Bradley's Arena here by eight to two, the Motor City fans are looking forward to junior group honors and a journey well into the play-offs of the O.H.A.

FAST ICE FOR SENIOR BATTLE HERE TOMORROW

Toronto Canoe Club and the Petes Meet Under Ideal Conditions.

BOTH ARE CONFIDENT.

Visitors Have Plenty of Speed and Will Be Tough Crew.

With fast ice assured for tomorrow night's Senior O.H.A. battle at Brock Street Rink between Toronto Canoe Club and Peterboro local fans are looking forward to a fast and hard-fought exhibition of hockey. The Paddlers, coached by Dr. Box, one of the best hockey players of his day, are the youngest Senior team in the game, with a line-up of some of last year's best Junior graduates and they have speed, stick-handling and shooting ability, that will make them decidedly tough opposition. They will be at full strength tomorrow night and are confident of beating the Petes and breaking into the win column. The home crew are equally determined to grab off the decision, and have been working hard in practice in spite of bad ice conditions.

The local line-up has not been announced, but it is expected that Babe Bogardis on the strength of his fine game against St. Mary's last week, will be in the battle array tomorrow.

"Mike" Rodden of Toronto will referee the game, which is to start at 8.30 o'clock sharp.

STILL DEADLOCK IN STRIKE TALKS

No Agreemen Yet in Effort To End Anthracite Strike.

WILLING TO GO ON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press)—Uncomprisingly opposed to any proposal offered by either side, the anthracite miners and operators deadlocked in their efforts to end the hard coal strike, still continued negotiation today. After each side had placed itself on record for or against various schemes to send the 158,000 men and boys back to work, yesterday the six miners and six operators came to the end of the road but professed willingness to go on if there was anything to consider.

DOMINIONS MUST DECIDE POLICY

Lord Parmoor Says No Compromise Possible on British Commitments.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—There is no half-way house. Either Canada and the other dominions must be consulted before any important commitments are undertaken by Britain or any important departure of foreign policy made or they must declare their independence of British foreign policy, and this independence must be recognized by international law. This declaration was made by Lord Parmoor in an exclusive interview with the British United Press.

Lord Parmoor was lord president of the council in the late Labor government, and one of Great Britain's leading legal authorities. He is also one of the greatest authorities in the country on foreign affairs. He was head of the British delegation to Geneva when the protocol was under discussion, and knows Canada and other dominions well from personal visits. The whole position has got to be revised, Lord Parmoor added. The Locarno Pack was signed without previous consultation with the dominions. It places upon Britain an obligation to fight on the side of either France or Germany in a case of aggression, and the dominions cannot escape some of the results of these obligations. It is true, that Chamberlain inserted a clause protecting dominion interests so that the dominions are not obliged to send troops or any form of assistance in event of war arising from the Locarno treaty.

Remains Enemy.

"But if Britain goes to war, the rest of the Empire automatically goes to war, and no general election in Canada or vote by Canadian parliament can alter this international fact," he continued. "All that Canada can do is to refuse to assist, but under international law she still remains an enemy of Britain's enemies.

"I know there are practical difficulties in consulting the dominions. The Geneva protocol discussion demonstrated that. But there must be an attempt to overcome some of the difficulties by general discussions between Great Britain and the dominions.

Change the Law.

If, on the other hand, Canada and other dominions are determined to pursue independent foreign policies, then the world must come to recognize that fact and adjust international laws so that Canada will be perfectly free to fight on the side of Britain if she wishes, but will not be automatically at war when Britain is at war. I think, too, that the Dominions have a perfect right, if they are to be bound to Britain in the matter of foreign policy, to secure a guarantee for any Dominion getting into trouble with a foreign power.

Must Face Facts.

"Australia, for instance, might get into trouble with Japan, and she has a right to obtain from Britain a guarantee that she will support her in any event if Australia is to be expected to endorse results coming from British foreign policy. Meanwhile the dominions must face the facts and prepare to find a way in which they can secure a larger voice in Britain's foreign policy. So far as the Locarno Treaty is concerned questions of war and peace are still in the hands of foreign offices, not the League of Nations, and it is a very unsatisfactory substitute for the protocol. The treaty was secured, not at Locarno but in Berlin, for it is founded on Germany's renunciation of Alsace and Lorraine and her entry into the League."

Lord Parmoor granted the interview because of the discussion as to whether or not Canada should endorse the Locarno Treaty.

ADMISSIONS FALL.

Fewer Canadians Seeking Entry to United States Than in 1924.

MONTREAL, January 7. — Canadian Press. — December statistics of the United States immigration service for the Canadian border, excluding Pacific coast ports, have been completed at the Montreal headquarters of the service. They show a falling off in admissions for the month, both at the border ports, and at Canadian Atlantic seaports, as compared with December, 1924.

Man Beat Regulations As Mule Was Immune

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7. United News. — At last a way has been found to beat the traffic laws.

While automobiles were halted along fashionable Sixteenth St., awaiting the inauguration of a new electric traffic control system, William K. Conway drove leisurely down the street in an ancient buggy.

"Hey!" shouted a policeman. "Dont you know there is a law against driving a horse-drawn vehicle down Sixteenth street?"

This ain't a horse-drawn vehicle," Conway replied, and he gave the mule staggering between the shafts a blow with his whip, and proceeded down the street.

UNITED CHURCH WEEK OF PRAYER

Many Heard Inspiring Address Last Night From Rev. A. J. Langford.

"JESUS AND PRAYER."

(Contributed).

The service last night held in Trinity Church as one of the week's series being conducted under the auspices of the United Churches in Peterboro was well attended in spite of the blizzard-like conditions which prevailed. Rev. A. J. Langford of Trinity Church was the preacher of the evening, and he gave a masterly presentation on the theme, "Jesus and Prayer." Taking for his text, "Lord teach us how to pray," Luke ii., 1, the speaker proceeded to point out that this request was but another expression of desire on the part of the disciples to find the way to approach God. The ancient religions reveal people very anxious to approach God and commune with Him, so they had their pantheons and much elaborate ritual as a means to aid their approach. In the Old Testament the approach is to a God of whose unity of being is preserved, yet a God of Holiness, a Law Giver, a Stern Judge, Whom the sinner must placate with vows and offerings.

Jesus, however, taught the great central truth that God was a Father, a loving Heavenly Father interested in His children and desiring their approach to Him. This idea Jesus reiterated over and over again, which denotes with how much importance He regarded it. Again Jesus teaches that character is an important condition of prayer. Fine phrases and elaborate word pictures without a consecrated mind and a consistent effort to attain goodness are an abomination upto God. He also taught that the emphasis in prayer must be put not on the individual need or the selfish desire, but rather on the unselfish principles and the pressing needs of the kingdom and the glory of the service thereof.

Another principle that Jesus taught about prayer was the importance of earnestness and importunity in prayer, citing two parables to illustrate the point, the "friend coming at midnight" and the unjust judge and the 'importunate widow.' By example Jesus revealed His practice of prayer. He prayed in the great crises of His life; at His baptism, where He received enduement for service; when He called the twelve to be apostles; at His transfiguration, when He was faced with the alternative of an immediate transference to glory or the longer and more difficult way, the way of the Cross; again in Gethsemane He spent hours in agonizing prayer. Prayer was the habit and the battleground of Jesus' life.

"Have we learned this secret of Christ? That prayer is not the effort to tell God what He must already know, nor the presumption that He does not feel for us far more than we feel for ourselves, nor an attempt to change His wise and loving will, but rather the harmonizing of our wills with His. Prayer is penitence, confession, aspiration, resignation: the converse of our hearts with the Father; the discipline of our wills to His will. There is no doubt about the reality of prayer if we believe we are His children and He is our Father."

PRICE OF SPUDS DOWN IN CHICAGO

Canadian Product, Duty Paid, Rivalling Domestic Potatoes.

CAUSED DECREASE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7 — (Canadian Press).—Up to date, 1,370 carloads of Canadian potatoes, duty paid, have rivalled the domestic potatoes, it is officially stated here, and after outdoing all recent high price records, the humble spuds are taking a graceful curve downward again a little nearer to the ordinary pocketbook level.

A fifty per cent. increase of potato shipments in the last week appears to be responsible.

The Toronto Players Have Agreed To Be on Ice at 8.30 Sharp.

Theatre

AT THE CAPITOL

LEOPARD BATTLES SCREEN PLAYERS

Doris Kenyon, Hughes and Big Cast Here in "Half Way Girl."

Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes now claim rank among the top-notchers in "sailordom" as well as in filmdom. They base their claim on experiences in their latest First National feature, "The Half Way Girl," which begins at the Capitol Theatre, commencing today.

First of all, after various exciting adventures on land, they find themselves on a 4,000 ton ocean liner, which is destroyed by fire, and from which they escape, only to find themselves sharing a small lifeboat with a snarling leopard. After a terrific struggle, they overcome this danger, too.

Fate, however, not satisfied with reel thrills for movie actors, decided to top off all these screen adventures with a real thrill for the two young players. For when Miss Kenyon and Hughes, together with the rest of the company of "The Half Way Girl," boarded their ship, one of the engine cylinders exploded as they were leaving New York harbor. A real fire broke out later after the vessel, following repairs, put out to sea.

"The Half Way Girl" was directed by John Francis Dillon, under supervision of Earl Hudson, producer of "Flaming Youth," "So Big," "Chickie" and "The Lost World." The action takes place in and around Singapore, Straits Settlements.

The cast includes Hobart Bosworth, Sam Hardy, Tully Marshall, Teddy Sampson and Sally Crute.

AT THE REGENT

TOM MIX HAS GREATEST CAST IN THRILLING SCREEN VERSION OF BRAND'S "BEST BAD MAN."

Tom Mix, Fox Film's star, will be the attraction at the Regent theatre to-day, beginning a three day's run. "The Best Bad Man" is Toms latest film offering and he is supported by Clara Bow and one of the best casts ever assembled in a Mix production.

The latest offering is the screen version of Max Brand's novel and many of the thrilling scenes are laid in Colorado. Mix, as a rich property owned, goes west in an attempt to settle the difficulties into which he has been plunged by his western manager.

The cast includes Tom Wilson, famous for his characterizations, and Cyril Chadwick, "genteel heavy," who with Tom Kennedy, causes all the trouble. Other members of the cast include Judy King, inimitable comedy flapper; Frank Beal, veteran character delineator; Paul Panzer, famous for his striking work in "The Fool," and other well known Fox actors.

Tony has his usual big moments, and some of the most thrilling sequences ever photographed are seen when Mix makes a daring rescue of Miss Bow.

J. G. Blystone, who handled the megaphone for some of Toms best releases, directed "The Best Bad Man."

The French police agents in Budapest in connection with the investigation, complain that they are delayed in their searches by the demands of the military for special passes.

This evening, distribution of cups and prizes will be made in connection with the Show.

FRANCOIS MADE CLEVER ESCAPE

Struggled Out of Bonds and Handcuffs While Suspended Head Down.

TOOK THREE MINUTES.

While the thermometer impassably registered fifteen degrees of frost, Francois, tied in yards of rope, and with his hands bound by two sets of police handcuffs, effected his escape from the toils and when lowered to the ground after three minutes of hanging head downward, he was free, and except for a numbness of his ankles, was apparently none the worse for his feat.

Sergeant Wigg and Arthur Blade adjusted the knots, and, accompanied by the creaking of the blocks, Francois was hoisted to a point midway between the Capitol roof and the ground. As he struggled to unfasten his bonds, the boreal breezes played about his hair and added to his handicap by stiffening his fingers.

The large crowd which had assembled at noon to witness the aerial battle was kept in check by a number of members of the police force.

The election expenses of Mr. G. N. Gordon, the candidate in the recent Federal election for Peterboro West are $2,512.64.—Joseph Wearing, Official Agent. 1d-6-3880

OTTAWA, January 7. Canadian Press. — "I really don't know what has been happening here during the past few days, but I am prepared to do anything reasonable," said Miss Agnes MacPhail this morning, when asked if she would align herself with the reorganized Progressive Party.

Miss MacPhail has been ill at her home for the past few days and was unable to attend the two day conferference of the Progressive party members. She arrived in Ottawa this morning and has not yet met any of the other Progressives. NO PROSPECT OF RESUMPTION OF RADIAL SERVICE

London Street Railway Company Has Let Time Limit Expire.

DEPENDENT ON BUSES.

Licenses Will Now Be Issued on Larger Scale.

LONDON, Jan. 7. — (Canadian Press).—An ultimatum of 48 hours given to the London Street Railway Company, in which time car service was to be resumed, has now expired. No cars are running, and the prospect of agreement is not bright to-day. The result is that the city continues to depend on seven large buses and a fleet of antiquated jitneys operating at indiscriminate fares. Should the street railway decide to operate now it would have to do so at seven and nine tickets for a quarter, since it was collecting a five cent fare previously upon sufferance of the Council. This makes it more unlikely that the cars will be placed back in operation.

'Bus and jitney licenses will be issued on a larger scale, and these are ready now, but are being held up temporarily by the Police Commission.

HON. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX ELECTED SPEAKER OF PARLIAMENT DURING BRIEF CEREMONIAL OF OPENING

Traditional Procedure Meticulously Observed as House Organizes.

VICEROY ABSENT

Governor-General Will Attend This Afternoon and Deliver Speech From Throne.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press). — A wave of the white-gloved hand of the clerk of the House Thursday afternoon, called to order the members-elect of the House of Commons and the business of Canada's fifteenth Parliament got under way. In the absence of a Speaker, Arthur Beauchesne presided over the initial proceedings. Old and new members dropped into their places, the eager talk subsided and the clerk read the notice that the Deputy-Governor was attending the Senate. Almost immediately the resounding knocks of the gentleman usher of the Black Rod rang through the Chamber, and the new occupant of that office, Major Thompson, made his first bow in the Commons. He summoned the members to attend in the Senate, where they were informed by the Governor-General's Deputy, Chief Justice Anglin, that His Excellency was not prepared to read the Speech from the Throne until the Commons had elected a Speaker.

Within a few minutes, the Commons had re-assembled and re-elected Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux Speaker of the House. Mr. Lemieux occupied the chair throughout the last Parliament, since 1921. After the customary speeches of the party leaders and that of the Speaker in acceptance, the Commons adjourned until this afternoon. Then the customary ceremonies of opening will be proceeded with.

Lapointe Speaks First.

Returning from the Senate Chamber, the Commons re-assembled and Hon. Ernest Lapointe took the floor, after Clerk Beauchesne had pointed to him as the first speaker. Mr. Lapointe said that the appointment of a Speaker was most important because the occupant of the chair would necessarily influence to a marked degree the character of the debates. The Commons had been fortunate in having for the last four years a Speaker who had filled his office. His tact, his shrewdness, his impartiality, had often operated to bring together conflicting elements in the House. Mr. Lapointe would suggest that for this occasion at least, Canada adopt the rule of the British House and re-elect the same Speaker from one Parliament to another. He quoted precedents in Canada, Hon. Joseph Cauchon, first Speaker under Confederation, and Hon. E. N. Rhodes, having both been re-elected for a second or third term. The re-election of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux would prove, he believed, to be a bond of union in the House. Mr. Lapointe's motion was seconded by Hon. J. A. Robb.

No Covernment, Says Meighen.

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen said that it was not customary to challenge the election of a Speaker. With what Mr. Lapointe had said about the qualifications of Mr. Lemieux for the chair he was in hearty accord. He thought he could promise Mr. Lemieux that the Conservative members would give the Speaker the same consideration which they had extended in the last House. Mr. Meighen presumed that Mr. Lapointe brought forward his motion, not as a member of the Government but as a member of the House for an ordinary constituency. "He could not speak as a member of the Government because Weather Records In 1925: Coldest At Ottawa 36 Deg.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press)—During 1925 several weather records were broken in the Ottawa district.

The coldest weather ever recorded at the Experimental Farm was experienced on January 19th, when the mercury fell to 36 degrees below zero. The month of July was the coolest July since 1891. August was the drist August since 1899, receiving only 1.04 inches of rain, while September was the wettest September on record, receiving 6.12 inches of rain. The month of October was the coldest October ever recorded since records were first started at the Experimental Farm 36 years ago.

The mean temperature for 1925 was 41.3 degrees, being slightly below the average of 41.9 degrees.

GOVERNMENT TO RESUME POWERS KING DECLARES

Premier Says Normal Course Will be Adopted, If Not Challenged.

MAJORITY IN DOUBT

Speech From Throne Implies Resumption of Power.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press).—Once the Speech from the Throne is delivered the Government proposes to exercise its normal powers unless it should be challenged, its future will depend on whether or not it can obtain a majority in the House of Commons.

Premier Mackenzie King said last night that he did not regard the election of the Speaker as a vote of confidence in the Government. The choice of a Speaker was a function of Parliament and the selection did not necessarily imply that the Government had the approval of the Commons.

On the other hand he made it clear that the Government proposes to resume its full powers after the throne speech is delivered. The delivery of the speech implied such a resumption of power, he said. It wa the right of the opposition to question the position of the Government should it so desire, but failing this the Government functioned in a normal manner.

Since the election, the Government has refrained from exercising the power of appointment, and consequently a number of vacancies are unfilled. The above statement indicates, however, that, unless challenged immediately, the Government will go ahead and make such appointments at is considers necessary.

NATIONAL DEBT LESS.

Decrease of Thirty-six Millions Since Jan. 1, 1925.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—The national debt is thirty-six millions less this New Year than last, according to a statement issued by the Department of Finance. The total net debt at December 31 was $2,381,735,027.

GERMAN STEEL FIRMS FORMING BIG COMBINATION

Indications Are That It Is Being Financed With American Money.

OTHERS MAY FOLLOW.

Further Agreement Expected Between Trusts in Different Countries.

LONDON, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—The organization of the German iron and steel industry into a trust through the forthcoming combination of the principal Ruhr firms is being closely followed by the same industry in this country—an interest which is intensified by indications from the United States that the new monopoly is likely to be partly financed with American money.

The principal impression of the industrial authorities here is that the successful conclusion and operation of the German trust is almost certain to lead to similar action by the iron and steel manufacturers in other European countries, including Great Britain. When this is achieved, the correspondent is authoritatively informed, the next step will be an attempt to reach an agreement between these national trusts regarding European, if not world, export trade in iron and steel.

According to information here, the new German trust, when organized, will control forty per cent. of the iron and steel output of that country. This is without Krupps, which are definitely understood to have refused to enter the combine.

Able Bodied Indigents Form Buck Saw Brigade

OTTAWA, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press)—"The buck saw brigade" started work in Ottawa yesterday. This is the result of a decision of the Social Service Department of the City to give needy families wood instead of coal. When an able bodied man applies for fuel, he is set at work in the City's wood yard sawing and splitting up hardwood. The man gets wood for his own home, but has in addition to cut up some for the needy families where there are no able bodied men.

Water Rushing Over Part of Zuider Zee—Was Ysel River Dyke.

AMSTERDAM, Holland, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—A dyke on the Ysel River, near Zalkin, in the province of Over-Ysel, is reported to have burst this morning, the water rushing over old Ebroweck to Polder (part of Zuider Zee) and threatening several villages including Elburg, Wezep and Kamperveen.

Moderate Indulgence In So-Called Vice Healthy

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—Moderate indulgence in all "so-called vices" was given as the secret of longevity by Dr. Adolf Lorenz, 72-year-old Viennese surgeon, when he arrived yesterday on the Berengaria.

"To reach ripe old age," he said, "and still be of service, one should indulge moderately in all so-called vices. I have done it all my life. I have always partaken moderately of alcoholic drinks, because alcohol taken in medicinal quantities is the best thing for the system.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—Thomas King, a chauffeur, his wife, Nora, and their three children, the oldest five years old, were found dead to-day in their Manhattan home. The wife and children apparently had been beaten to death and King's throat was cut with a razor.

The police believed that King killed his family and then took his own life after turning on the gas in his apartment.

MOTORISTS SHOULD GET NEW MARKERS

Chief of Police Says There is No Excuse For Neglect as Supply Is Here.

Chief of Police Samuel Newhall issued a warning today which he said motorists should heed. It is an offence against the law he declared for a motor car to be operated now under a 1925 marker. There being a complete stock of the new license tags at the Chamber of Commerce there was nothing to prevent car owners from obtaining them. He intimated that proceedings would be taken against those who neglected too long in securing the 1926 permits.

The chief said that the new operators licenses which should have been on hand at the first of January had not arrived yet but that those who required them would be notified later.

Corn Is Staff Of Life In United States' Belt

CHICAGO, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—"The staff of life" has been changed from wheat to corn in the grain belt.

Golden corn, one of the United States contributions to the world's food supply, is going on midwestern tables in every conceivable form—corn "pone," corn meal mush, corn fritters, corn syrup and even corn sugar.

INCREASE DISCOUNT EXCISE TAX STAMPS

Chartered Banks Authorized To Deduct Commission at Time of Purchase.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—A blow to small scalpers of excise stamps and a boon to Canadian banks was announced last night by Hon. George P. Boivin, Minister of Customs and Excise, who stated that an order in council had been approved providing that chartered banks would be allowed a discount of 2 per cent instead of 1 per cent on the total face value of all excise stamps sold by them and that they would be authorized to deduct this commission at the time of the purchase of stamps from the department.

BAVARIANS FEAR MUSSOLINI WILL MOVE FRONTIER

Afraid Dream of Empire May Result in Seizure of Territory.

GERMAN BRANCHES.

Fascists in Munich Flaunt Anti-German Badges.

By Guenther Tonn
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—Bavarian Nationalists are fearful that Italian Premier Mussolini and his Fascisti will seek to force Italy's boundary past the Brenner Pass to the Bavarian frontier. To this end a group of them presented to the Bavarian Diet an interpellation as the alleged Fascist aims to extend Italian territory under a dream of empire. The inquiry also called the Government's attention to the formation of Fascisti branches in Germany, especially at Munich, where the members flaunted "anti-German" badges.

The Government was asked to give its reasons for tolerating "these affronts." So-called Fascist organizations have long existed in Germany, with such men as General Ludendorff and Adolf Hitler of Munich, the ringleaders in their work. Of late, however, these orders have been little in evidence and the above despatch may mean that an intirely new type of Fascist order is growing up in Bavaria. The old Fascist groups, with pretentious titles such as "Steel-He'met," "Werewolf," "German Yourth Order," "Viking Bund," were distinctly "pro-German," basing most of their propaganda on "Germany for the Germans; purity of race; elimination of Jews; revenge."

NO PROGRESS IN STRIKE PARLEY

Conference Adjourned on Thursday Without Even a Nucleus of Peace.

WAR OF ATTRITION

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press).—Anthracite miners and operators, deadlocked in their attempt to negotiate a new wage contract and end the hard coal strike, are apparently waiting for something to turn up or for one or the other side to break up their joint conference.

After holding another long session yesterday, they adjourned to eleven o'clock today with the statement that their discussion "did not result in any definite conclusions."

To observers it appeared to be an endurance test for the negotiators, aside from the ability of the idle men and the coal companies to hold out indefinitely.

The negotiators cleared the table Wednesday of all pending proposed peace plans and other matters vital to ending the controversy and returned yesterday to a desultory discussion of various ideas that had already been advanced by either side.

When evening began to fall, Chairman Alban Markle, the neutral member of the conference, suggested adjournment, and as there was nothing before the conferees that looked like a starting point toward a settlement, the six miners and six operators again filed out of the Union League Club, where the meetings are being held.

GAS CO. SUSPENDS.

Stratford Voted Against Purchase at $60,000.

STRATFORD, Jan. 8.— (Canadian Press.)— Announcement was made Thursday that the Stratford Gas Company would suspend operations here on February 8. About 700 consumers are effected. Popularity of Hydro, which reduced the company's business, is the reason for the decision, according to the manager J. P. King. Last Monday the ratepayers rejected at the polls a by-law authorizing the purchase of the plant for $60,000. The utility was organized 52 years ago and is now operating without a charter by consent of the city.

Evelyn Thaw Sorry She Is Recovering From Poison

CHICAGO, Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press) — Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who swallowed poison Tuesday after a prolonged New Year's party, continued to improve today but said she was sorry she would recover.

Meanwhile, there were reports that Harry K. Thaw, her divorced husband, would be in Chicago next week and these reports led to rumors of attempts at a reconciliation. Thaw's attorneys said they expected him here shortly but were not specific as to the date, and said the conference was on business matters only.

RESPITE GIVEN TO SWISS TOWN; LANDSLIDE ENDS

Burghers Offer Prayers as Great Mass Stops 100 Yards Away.

TO FALL SOME DAY.

Experts Say Final Crash May Be Delayed a Year—Divert River.

(By Henry Wood, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

GENEVA, Jan. 8. — As though by a miracle, the gigantic landslide bearing down upon the little village of Schimberg, at the rate of several yards a day, halted to-day when the rain suddenly ceased. Millions of tons of earth stopped their onward journey less than 100 yards from the town, and government authorities said that the final crash might be delayed for several days, or that it might even be postponed a whole year.

Prayers went up from the simple burghers that providence should work a new miracle and bring true the hope of the government expert that the rain would cease.

Many of the town's folks in the path of the 60-acre slide had already packed their belongings and moved to a more secure spot, demolishing their houses to cheat the slide. Then, too, the orchardists on the hilly slopes between the slide and the town had chopped down their trees for firewood, hoping thereby to save at least kindling wood out of their labor of years.

Meantime, with the warning that the slide must crash sometime, the town to-day started diverting the course of the river so that there would be no floods from damming of it when the inexorable mass should finally come roaring down.

Arsenic Poisoning From Imported Fruit Alarms British Authorities.

PUBLIC WARNS.

LONDON, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—British officials for the second time in recent weeks have called attention to the danger of arsenic poisoning from imported apples. Middlesex County Council has distributed a leaflet to dealers referring to the recent announcement of the Minister of Health that certain imported apples have been found to contain arsenic on the skin surface. The leaflet points out that in spite of recent precautions, quantities of dangerously contaminated apples are still on sale and warns the public against eating the skins.

HOOVER ALLOWS MONOPOLIES IN UNITED STATES

Outcry Against British Rubber Control Declared to Be Propaganda.

DOMESTIC TRUSTS

Tire Companies Seek Excuse To Inflate Prices, Says Democrat.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press).—Continuing with its investigation of the British control of the crude rubber supply and other foreign monopolies, the House commerce committee yesterday received testimony from a number of representatives of the United States rubber industry.

Meanwhile, in the House, the advisability of the investigation was questioned by several Democrat members, Representatives Black of New York, and Connally of Texas, both asserting that the committee should turn its attention to monopolies in this country over which Congress has legislative power.

Secretary Hoover's position in urging the rubber inquiry amounted to 'propaganda plus", in the opinion of Mr. Black, who charged that United States tire companies were "siccing the faithful Hoover on the British lion just when they are about to inflate prices."

Monopolies At Home.

Mr. Connally advised the committee to take a look at "the trusts that are running between its legs" and not spend all its energies attacking foreign monopolies.

Another Democrat, Representative Celler, also of New York, asserted that Mr. Hoover "has rented and rallied against the British, and yet has encouraged monopolies in this country"

F. A. Sieberling, president of the Sieberling Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio, told the committee that Great Britain could "squeeze us to death overnight" if it desired to press the advatnage of its control over crude rubber.

Fear Crash in Prices.

W. O. Rutherford, vice-president of the B. F. Goodrich Company of Akron, testified that United States rubber manufacturers were certain to suffer a loss of millions of dollars when the inevitable crash comes in rubber price, but deired marked stability even at such a cost.

A. L. Viles, general manager of the Rubber Association of America, held that the solution of the rubber problem lay in an increased production outside British jurisdiction, suggesting the Philippines as a potential source.

SERVICE RESUMED ON LONDON STREETS

Representative Business Men Conferred With Company —Temporary Agreement.

LONDON, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—The service was resumed this morning by the London Street Railway Company after a tie-up which lasted several days. The relief comes as a result of intervention yesterday afternoon by a group of representative business men, who impressed the Street Railway Company with the good faith of the Council. It is now declared that the Council will meet on Monday to arrange a sixty-day operation period at a 5 cent fare during which time a definite permanent agreement can be made with the company.

SUBURBAN USERS TO BE ASSESSED NEW LIGHT RATE

Utilities Commission Has Had No Word From Hydro on Matter.

EFFECTIVE JAN. 1.

Kingston Lighting System Met With Approval of Deputation.

The meeting of the Peterborough Utilities Commission, which was adjourned yesterday in order that Gordon S. Matthews, the new Commissioner, could view the property and plant in charge of the Commission was resumed in the afternoon. E. F. Mason, as chairman, read a report from the deputation that had visited Kingston in connection with the lighting system. In Kingston, they have a lighting system similar to that which is being installed in East City, and the report that the deputation presented states it has been a decided success here, as it is not only more beneficial from the lighting standpoint, but considerably more economical to operate. With reference to the proposed new rates for the Suburban Area consumers, which went into effect on January 1, the chairman stated that no word had been received from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission in the matter and that the Utilities Commission had no other alternative than to assess the new rates as ordered.

Business of a routine nature occupied the remainder of the session.

BUDGET DEFICIT FACING BRITAIN

Will Ask Debtors To Pay Larger Amount on War Loans.

CONFER WITH ITALY.

LONDON, Jan 8 (Canadian Press).—Great Britain will ask Italy at negotiations opening here Monday to pay £7,000,000 ($33,950,000) annually on her war debt of £500,000,000 ($2,245,000,000).

Such terms would be proportionate with a tentative agreement between Great Britain and France in which France is to pay £12,500,000 annually for 62 years, but in comparison would not be as lenient as the United States terms to Italy.

The British declare they are faced with a budget deficit and that it is necessary to ask their debtors to pay an amount which will allow keeping the budget at its level.

PRESENTATION MADE TO MRS. BALLARD

Employee of Chamber of Commerce Given Silver Tea Service.

Mrs. M H. Ballard was the recipient of a beautiful silver tea service and tray from the Chamber of Commerce and affiliated organizations in the council room of the Chamber last night, on the occasion of her retirement to private life, after having completed six years' faithful service with the local branch. J. Wells Fraser, president of the Chamber of Commerce, spoke a few words of appreciation of the work that Mrs. Ballard had accomplished while with the organization. F. D. Kerr, K.C., president of the Trent Waterways Development Association, made the presentation, and told too of the good will that had always existed.

Mrs. Ballard expressed surprise and delight at the gift, and expressed regret at severing her connection with the Chamber of Commerce and hoped that the year 1926 would be the most prosperous in the history of the local organization.

CANADA'S EXPORTS OF CHEESE INCREASED 23 PER CENT. IN 1925

G. A. Gillespie of Peterboro Elected Director of Dairymen's Association.

CHEERING REPORT

KINGSTON, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press) — Addressing the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association in convention Thursday, Dr. J. A. Ruddick, Dominion Dairy Commissioner, said there was a possibility if present tendencies prevailed that Canada might regain her old position as the largest exporter of cheese.

"For 12 months ended October, 1925," said Dr. Ruddick, "our cheese exports were 23 per cent larger than they were in their preceding 12 months, while exports of cheese from New Zealand for the year which ended July, 1925, show a decrease of 5.2 per cent. If we take the total exports of all products from both countries and reduce them to a butterfat basis for the same period, we find that while Canada's total exports shows an increase of 27 per cent, these from New Zealand were increased by only 6.8 per cent.

The commissioner said that the ills of the industry, to use a medical term, were functional rather than organic. If Canadians did not succeed in holding their own in the world's markets it would be their own fault and the result of apathy or indifference rather than on account of any serious disadvantage or handicap in the struggle for a reasonable share of the international trade.

Quality Improving

Dr. Ruddick said that Canadian butter was undoubtedly improving in quality and nowhere was this more noticeable than in Ontario. The improvement in marketing conditions under the grading system is an important factor in raising the status of both cheese and butter. Under the old conditions before grading was established, exporters were not always too careful of the quality of the different lots with which they filled orders for "finest" cheese or butter.

The following directors were elected at yesterday afternoon's session, representing the various counties: Prescott, M. W. Sheppard, Bradley Creek; Glengarry, A. J. Robertson, Martintown; Russell, W. H. Olmstead, Leonard; Grenville, J. A. Sanderford, Oxford Station; Renfrew, J. F. Gibbons, Renfrew; Carleton, W. G. Codkin, Carnsonby; Lanark, M. B. Cochrave, Almonte; Stormont, W. O. Wort, Avonmore; Frontenac, E. Campsall, Hartington; Lennox and Addington, Geo. McGill, Centreville; West Hastings, T. H. Ketcheson, Belleville; Prince Edward, C. W. Fraleigh, Bloomfield; Peterboro, G. A. Gillespie, Peterboro; Northumberland, W. A. Merrills, Campbellford; North Hastings, A. Nicholson, Madoc; Dundas, A. McGruer, Brinstons; Leeds, J. H. Fawcett, Mallorytown; Ontario, William Newman, Lorneville.

The association adopted a resolution approving the policy expressed by George H. Barr, dairy director for Ontario, in his proposed cream grading for the province, also the issuing of yearly certificates to cheese and butter makers.

WINTER SCHOOL OPENS MONDAY

Annual Session of Instruction Will Last Throughout Week.

HELD AT COBOURG

COBOURG, Jan. 8.—The fifth annual Bay of Quinte Winter School will open in the United Church and School, Division street, Cobourg, on Jan. 11 and continue to Jan. 18, for the study of the Bible, missions, young people's work and training young men and women for leadership.

The opening service is at 7 p.m. on Monday evening, when President Horwood will present greetings and Rev. D. C. Ramsay, M.A., will make the inaugural address. This will be followed by a lecture by Rev. W. Harold Young, M.A., B.D., of Toronto, on "Youth in the Seats of Power," in the church auditorium. A cordial invitation is extended to all as Mr. Young's outstanding ability as a speaker is well known here, and it is expected very many will be out to hear this lecture.

Commencing on Tuesday, there will be each forenoon Bible study groups under competent leaders, studies in religious education and in missions, and afternoon sessions of equal interest and benefit, embracing also leadership training in C.S. E.T. and C.G.I.T. work.

On Tuesday evening the local Young People's League will welcome and entertain the members of the school.

On Wednesday evening Plainville Young People's League will give a play.

On Thursday night there will be an impromptu concert.

Rev. H. A. Bunt is Secretary of the school, Rev. A. McLaughlin is Business Manager, Miss Alice Scarpe and Miss Hazel Cannon is Registrars.

Worshipped in Public Library.

The congregation of St. Mark's Anglican Church, Port Hope, held their services on Sunday in the Public Library building, their place of worship having been destroyed by fire the Wednesday previous. The members of the executive of the church held an emergency meeting on Thursday morning when the offer of the East Primary School for holding Sunday School was also accepted.

HASTINGS DIVIDED ON PAVING QUESTION

Reeve Favors Work Now, Fearing Withdrawal of Grant—New School Shelved.

HASTINGS, Jan. 8.— A paving contractor and an engineer from Peterborough were here the other day in conference with some of the members of the new Council and this is taken as a sign that an attempt will be made this year to have some of the leading streets paved. A survey was made by a Toronto firm last year and estimates were prepared, but no further action was taken. Reeve Hess, who has been re-elected, is in favor of paving as he is of the opinion that the grants made by the province to urban municipalities for the paving of streets that form links in the Provincial highways, may be reduced or withdrawn entirely.

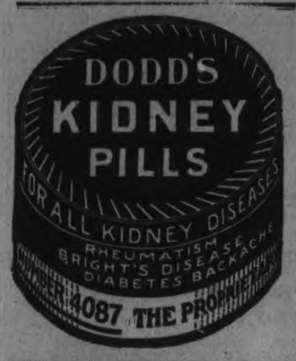
The village is divided on this issue as some of the taxpayers would prefer to see a system of waterworks installed before any permanent improvement is made on the streets.

The question of building a new Public school, which kept the village in something of a turmoil all last year, is likely to be shelved for the present. The three new trustees are understood to be opposed to any outlay for this purpose and this will result in a deadlock on the Board.

It is claimed that the School Board has on hand a surplus of $1,800, although at the request of the Council, when the rate was struck in 1925, the trustees reduced their estimate from 13 to 10 mills. The surplus would come within $300 of being sufficient to pay the salaries of the two teachers for one year.

TWO SENT ON FOR TRIAL.

STEWART, B.C., Jan. 8.—Gladys Gale and Ruby Dolan were committed for trial Wednesday by Magistrate Scarlett to the next assizes on a charge of murder arising from the death of James N. Donald, a well known prospector who was found shot to death New Year's morning in the Gale woman's residence. No defence was offered.



HON RODOLPHE LEMIEUX ELECTED

there is no Government," added Mr. Meighen.

Robert Forke, Progressive leader, endorsed the appointment of Mr. Lemieux, and the member for Gaspe was then declared elected. He had been sitting at the far end of the Chamber, and it was noted that he sat between two Independent members, Henri Bourassa, of Labelle, and J. S. Woodsworth, Labor leader from Winnipeg.

The new Speaker was then escorted down the Chamber by Mr. Lapointe and Robb. He stood beside the chair while he made a brief speech of acceptance. He would be often reminded of what had been said of Alexander Mackenzie, that "duty was his love and conscience was his ruler." This inscription on the statue of Mackenzie on Parliament faced him whenever he looked from the window of his office. He would continue to try and maintain the dignities, privileges, usages and customs of the mother of Parliaments.

Opens and Adjourns.

Mr. Lemieux then took the chair, and his first utterance was to declared the motion for his election carried. There was a general laugh mixed with congratulatory applause which had been accorded the Speaker from time to time as the ceremony proceeded. The mace was simultaneously placed on the table. Beyond the reading of a couple of formal announcements concerning staff, there was no business before the House, and the Chamber immediately adjourned on motion of Hon. Ernest Lapointe, who is leading the House in the absence of Premier King.

One of the peculiarities of Thursday's proceedings was the method of carrying the mace. Usually borne over the shoulder of the Sergeant-at-Arms or his Deputy, it rested in the hollow of his arm as the Sergeant-at-Arms preceded the Speaker out of the Chamber after dismissal of the House. It will not be carried shoulder-high until the Governor-General has attended the Parliament Buildings, been officially informed of the election of a Speaker and tacitly approved the Commons' choice by reading the Speech from the Throne.

Government's Programme.

This afternoon at the Bar of the Senate, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, newly-elected Speaker of the House, will inform the Governor-General of his appointment and make formal claim to all the old rights and privileges of the Commons. His Excellency will then read the Speech from the Throne, outlining the Government's programme of legislation. This, it is believed, will include: Proposals for reducing taxation; rural credit and immigration schemes; commission of maritime rights; completion of Hudson Bay Railway; return of natural resources to Alberta.

It is unlikely that the Speech will indicate the nature of proposals for reduction of taxes. These are usually reserved for the budget speech. But it is thought likely that they will embrace reductions in income tax, probably by enlarging the scope of exemptions, sales tax and stamp taxes.

Once the Speech from the Throne is delivered, members of the House will return to their own Chamber. There, in exercise of their rights, the Commons will give first reading to a pro forma bill before they consider the business of the Crown. There will be tabling of reports, some formal motions, and the House will adjourn till Monday.

The debate on the address will begin and issue between the two sides of the House will be joined.

BOY FOUND DEAD TORONTO STREET

Had Apparently Been Hurled From Bicycle By Motor Car.

NO WITNESSES.

TORONTO, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—Apparently struck down by a motor car, William Merchant, aged 14, was found lying dead on a boulevard on King Street last night. The back of the head had been crushed in, apparently by contact with a telegraph pole close by, and his neck broken. The boy's bicycle, a mass of scrap iron, was lying close to the body. It is believed the boy was killed by a motorist, but no one saw the accident.

CO-OPERATION IN RURAL CREDITS

Proposal By Toronto Professor at Mantioba Conference.

TO HELP FARMERS.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—Extension of the co-operative movement into the field of agricultural credits was suggested as a means of affording adequite and cheaper short-term borrowing facilities to the farmer by Prof. C. R. Fay, of the economics department of the University of Toronto, addressing the Manitoba Rural Credits Societies' conference here yesterday.

Manitoba's system of rural credits does not appear encouraging to Prof. Fay. The remedy, he said, lay in creation of a condition, rather than in establishment of any particular credit system. Agricultural communities of Western Canada would have to get to the point where their legitimate credits were reduced to a minimum, and their money would come in more regularly. In the co-operative plan he told his hearers he had great faith, and once properly established, the marketing organizations would be able to get all the credit they needed.

Hon. D. L. McLeod, municipal commissioner, welcomed the 150 delegates attending the conference, and promised the co-operation of the Manitoba Government in any recommendations submitted.

CANADIAN HELD IN JEWEL THEFT

Identified As One of Nine Who Robbed Jewelry Company.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—Charles Clay, a Canadian who of late years has resided in Manhattan, was held here yesterday after police said he had been identified as one of nine men who held up 33 employees in the jewellery plant of William K. Taylor and Company in Newark, and escaped with $50,000 worth of gems. Miss Emma Bader, a book-keeper in the Taylor plant, was said to have picked Clay from a line-up of fifteen men. Extradition of the Canadian to Newark will be sought.

Clay fell into the toils last Sunday when he was alleged to have participated in the hold-up of an auto renting concern here.

HALIFAX'S CHAMPIONS.

Two doughty champions of Maritime rights and firm believers in the future of their home city and their home Province are the Halifax Chronicle and the Halifax Herald, both of which make an annual practice of issuing a special New Year's number.

Copies of these have been received by the Examiner, and we are glad to congratulate our Eastern contemporaries, not only upon the splendid workmanship and literary value of these special editions, but also by the fine spirit of optimism that permeates every page and practically every sentence of the New Year's numbers.

The Herald calls its special issue an opportunity edition and paints a glowing future for Halifax, while the Chronicle is equally optimistic on its outlook.

Halifax and Nova Scotia are well served by these two virile, aggressive newspapers.

ELECTING ALDERMEN.

Oshawa electors on Monday turned down a bylaw proposing to substitute the election of Aldermen by general vote for the present ward system.

The majority against the change was only 195, and it is likely that the advocates of the general system will bring the matter up again a year hence.

The chief objection to dropping the ward system is said to have been the fear that under a general vote some sections of the city might be without representation on the Council.

That this condition sometimes results Peterboro can testify, for at present East City has no representative on the Board of Aldermen, with the result that a large and populous section of Peterboro is without a voice in public affairs, so far as the Council is concerned.

There is much to be said in favour of both methods, and some municipalities have changed from one to the other several times without being able to come to a definite decision as to which is the better.

It is not desirable to have large sections of the city without a representative—and yet there is reason to question the value of the ward system from the viewpoint of bringing the best material into the city's service.

GIVE SIR HENRY A CHANCE.

One of the many difficulties that are part and parcel of the management of a public utility under a system of public ownership is illustrated by the clamor in various sections of the country over the changes in train service announced by the Canadian National Railways to become effective this month.

Sir Henry Thornton is endeavouring to put the National Railways on a paying basis, and the curtailed service and cancelling of certain trains included in his winter schedule were decided upon by him because the particular service effected by the change had been operated at a loss for some time.

Trains that were not paying their way or offering any prospect of doing so the head of Canada's railways decided should be taken off their runs.

But what has been the result?

Just as soon as the new schedule was announced there was a hue and cry in the districts affected, deputations of protest were organized, politicians were dragged into the affair, and Sir Henry is so busy dealing with the complaints that he has little time left for the major business of his position.

Everybody wants to see the Canadian National Railways on a paying basis, but nobody is willing to help to that end by accepting a service that the head of the National system considers as necessary in the interest of economiy.

Better let Sir Henry run the lines to suit himself if he is ever to pull the system out of the financial boghole into which it has been sinking.

He has no chance to succeed if every schedule change he announces is to be opposed by deputations.

SHIP WHEAT THROUGH CANADIAN PORTS.

The press dispatches carry the news that, for the second time in the history of the Western Canadian grain trade, the shipments from the head of the lakes during the present season of navigation exceeded 300,000,000 bushels of all kinds of grain, says the Brantford Expositor. Of this total the Canadian vessels carried approximately 9,000,000 bushels more than were carried by United States boats, the former carrying 157,602,753 bushels of all kinds of grains and the latter 148,000,000 bushels. The regrettable feature of the figures, however, is the fact that the United States vessels carried a far larger tonnage of wheat than the Canadian vessels. The American boats carried 162,703,050 bushels of grain to United States ports, while only about 140,000,000 bushels were shipped to Canadian ports. Most of the wheat carried to American lake ports was ultimately exported through United States Atlantic ports.

This is a problem that ought to receive the urgent attention of all Canadians who are interested in the development of Canada. The shipment of wheat through American ports ought not to continue a season longer than is necessary. The Dominion has built up an expensive transportation system to the Canadian ocean ports, and has also provided costly elevators to handle the grain, and as far as possible all this business should pass through Canadian terminals. The demand is becoming very urgent that shippers of Canadian grain shall use Canadian routes, thereby contributing to the wealth of their own country. There has been altogether too much complacency shown in regard to this matter, and it is time that it was dealt with by the authorities with a strong and vigorous hand. The policy of all loyal Canadians ought to be to send Canadian business over Canadian routes and through Canadian ports.

Miss Agnes MacPhail declares she is prepared to "do anything reasonable." But she draws the line at cadet training.

Modern girl proves that she can get along without backing. An evening dress is offered for proof. —Brantford Expositor.

THE HOMICIDE PROBLEM.

The Examiner's contention that the readiness with which revolvers may be obtained is a very material factor in the murder epidemic which has been sweeping the United States is sustained by Frederick L. Hoffman, consulting statistician of the Prudential Insurance Company, who has made an exhaustive study of the homicide problem and has just published a very informative pamphlet on the subject.

Mr. Hoffman says: "Firearms in this country are obtainable by almost any one, and they are carried by many regardless of the law on the subject. Penalties for violations are frequently light and often not enforced. Nearly every so-called 'Detective Magazine' carries a string of advertisements of cheap revolvers, guaranteed to kill. Mail order houses furnish weapons to any one, old or young, sane or insane, good or bad, without the least difficulty. Some important mail order houses have of late discontinued the practise, while magazines seem to show a like commendable tendency with regard to the advertising of firearms to be purchased by mail. One of these publications of a very large circulation, sold on every news-stand throughout the country, advertises in its July, 1925, issue, among others, 'Ranger Blue Steel model, only $6.85—order today. Guaranteed powerful, accurate and smooth action. Sent in sealed package. Baltimore, Md.' A second advertisement reads in part, 'Twenty-shot automatic, $8.45, same as used 'over there,' New York City.' A third reads, 'Get this gun, only $6.45. For dependable demonstration and smoothness of action get this. New York.' The fourth reads, 'Six-shot, greatest bargain ever offered, $6.25. Sells elsewhere for $15.00. Pay postman on arrival, New York.' The fifth reads, 'Here is your chance to get the king of revolvers, $9.65, New York.' The sixth reads, 'King of revolvers, never out of order, $9.75, New York.' While the seventh reads, 'Finest perfected revolver. Quick as a flash. Great penetrating power, $6.45, New York.'"

Examiner readers will be shocked to learn from this investigator that the annual toll of murder in the United States now exceeds 11,000.

During 1924 deaths from homicide in the cities across the border reached the highest rate on record, about 10.3 per 100,000, almost double the rate of twenty-five years ago, and while the figures are not available for last year, it is evident from the number of killings reported in the newspapers that the homicide total in 1925 will be as great as ever.

The conditions are such that one paper declares that "whenever you see a baseball game four or five of the crowd which watches it with you are statistically marked to have their bodies shredded and blasted by a murder's bullet during the year."

Canadians should be grateful they are living in a country where the law moves swiftly and surely to punish the homicide.

WELL WORTH WHILE.

(An Editorial for Young People in the Hamilton Spectator.)

The Spectator wishes all its young readers a very happy new year, with good health, contentment and every good thing. The year will be largely what we make it, for it is quite true, as the saying has it, that a man, and especially a young man, is the architect of his own fortunes. If we resolve to be upright, energetic, loyal, true to ourselves and others, nothing can prevent the year being a glad and successful one. If, on the other hand, we make no resolutions at all, but are content to let things take their course, we shall probably find that circumstances will often get the better of us, instead of us getting the better of circumstances. For it does help very much to make good resolutions, in spite of what the would-be humorists say. There is no reason why these resolutions, when made, should be broken. The point is to be sincere about it, to think up the most useful resolutions we can, and to determine to hold to them faithfully whatever may happen. People who break their good resolutions do so, as a rule, because they were not serious in making them in the first place and never really intended to keep them in the second place. It is no wonder, then, that there should be so many failures. Others make the mistake of forming too many resolutions and undertake more than they can accomplish.

Every one must make his or her own resolutions. It is not possible for another to suggest what they shall be. We are all conscious of our own special weaknesses and we are all aware of possible improvements in our characters. That which we desire to be we should resolve to be. It is surprising how we become what we wish to become, if the ideal is kept steadily in view. There are certain faults we should like to get rid of, there are ambitions we want to see fulfilled. All that is necessary is to resolve to get rid of the former and to realize the latter, and nothing can destroy the effectiveness of such resolutions. The very fact of making them is a big step forward, and the longer they are kept the easier it will be to keep them. Habits will be formed which will be of lifelong benefit.

It is good to have an active and a negative set of resolutions—things to be done and things which shall not be done. This will make for a double development; it will teach us industry and perseverance as well as unselfishness and restraint. For we must cultivate this dual quality—the will to do and the will not to do. All good resolutions come down to this—that we will do those things which we ought to do and leave undone those things which we ought not to do. There is nothing at all silly in making new year resolutions; the only thing to be ashamed of is that we do not make and keep them. We are all capable of improvement, but we shall never improve until we make up our minds to do so, which is only another way of saying until we make good resolutions. There is no time so appropriate for a moral stocktaking as the beginning of a new year, the turning of another page in Time's book of destiny. What shall we write upon the blank sheet? It requires some thought, and having decided, it takes constancy to stick to our good intentions. Let 1926 be a year of satisfaction, free from regrets and as innocent as possible of error; may it be a year also of genuine progress.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Many things have been said about Ontario weather, but at least it has never been accused of being monotonous.

Will the expected fireworks at Ottawa commence today?

Oshawa carried a daylight saving bylaw on Monday by a majority of 1,138. The Motor City people tried the system last year and evidently appreciated the sample.

A correspondent complains that it took him half an hour to vote on New Year's Day. He should have had his slate ready before he visited the polling booth.

CATTLE, GRAIN AND PRODUCE

Peterboro—Toronto—Montreal

TORONTO LIVESTOCK.

TORONTO, Jan. 7.—There was an unexpectedly good market on Wednesday, and in the better grades of butchers, prices paid were 10 to 25 cents a cwt higher for the week. Six loads of export steers, averaging less than 1200 lbs, came in on Wednesday afternoon, and were all weighed up this morning to Rogers and Maybee at $8.50 a cwt. Good handyweight butchers sold at $7, and good premiums at $6.25 to $6.50 a cwt. Cows were again strong, and these sold at $5.40 to $6 a cwt. Canners sold at $2.25 to $2.50 a cwt. One medium quality bull brought $4.75 a cwt.

Calves settled back on Wednesday to where they opened on Monday, due to the drop on Monday and Tuesday in the Buffalo market. Top calves did not get over 13½ cents today. Common calves are 7 cents a pound.

Lambs are closing the week firm, with a basic price of about 14½ cents a pound on good ewes and wethers. Fred Dunn had the only shipment today, and these sold at this price.

Wednesday's hogs were marked at $12.50 a cwt. f.o.b. and this will be the price today. There will be a tryout for another cut next week, and the packers over-week bids are only $12.25 a cwt.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Extreme dullness marked the export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market today owing to the very limited demand from foreign buyers. The only sale reported was five loads of No. 1 Northern wheat at 10 1-2 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg May option, c.i.f. Bay Ports in order to fill engagements of ocean freight.

The domestic trade in cash grain was also slow, there being little demand from local and export buyers, but the tone of the market for oats was steady and prices were unchanged with car lots of Ontario and Quebec No. 2 white quoted at 53 cents, No. 3 white at 52 cents, and No. 4 white at 50 1-2 cents per bushel, ex-track.

According to latest cable advices received from Liverpool a stronger feeling has prevailed in that market for Canadian baled hay of late, and prices have advanced 2s 6d per ton to 92s 6d per ton, c.i.f., while the Glasgow market has also displayed further strength and prices are fully 5s per ton higher and the prospects for Canadian exporters are encouraging.

A very firm feeling prevails in the market for potatoes, but the volume of business showed no improvement as buyers in most cases seem to be fairly well supplied for the time being, but holders have confidence in the future course of the market and prices were unchanged.

In the wholesale butter trade there is a difference of opinion as to prices some of them claiming that they are selling finest creamery at 45c per lb. in solid packages, and at 46c per lb. in 1 lb. blocks, while others say the general prices are 1c per lb. lower.

The receipts of cheese were 159 boxes, as compared with 125 for the same day last week, and 190 for the corresponding day a year ago. The market was reported quieter owing to the fact that there was less enquiry from over the cable for supplies, but the tone was about steady and not fees for early makes were nominally quoted at 20 1-2c to 21c per lb., and current receipts at 17 1-2c to 18c per lb.

EGG PRICES

OTTAWA, Jan. 7 (Canadian Press).—Unusually mild weather throughout the East is bringing a weakened condition to the egg market and as a result of increasing receipts. Montreal reports that fresh stocks are arriving from every direction with practically no buyers. Toronto is lower and Vancouver market has undergone another decline.

Toronto—Jobbing, fresh specials 54, extras 52, firsts 50, storage unchanged.

Montreal—With stocks accumulating the tone of the egg market is weak and prices are lower. Cars of eggs from British Columbia on consignment are tending to demoralize the market. Jobbing, fresh extras 52, firsts 47.

Winnipeg—Egg receipts show a further increase. Jobbing, fresh extras 52 to 54, firsts 47, seconds 35, storage extras 46, firsts 38, seconds 30.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7.—(Canadian Press).—Disheartened over light volume of new speculative buying and over smallness of export demand, a good many traders let go their wheat holdings today, almost regardless of price. The wheat market closed heavy, 2 1-4 to 4 5-8 cents net lower, new style, May $1.76 1-4 to $1.76 1-2, and July $1.52 to $1.52 1-8. Corn finished at 1-2 to 3-4 cents decline, oats 1-4 to 1-4 at 3-8 cents off, and provisions unchanged at 25 cents up.

With primary domestic receipts of wheat almost double those of a year ago, and considerably in excess of the corresponding total a week ago, speculative buyers here showed a general disposition to wait some decided new incentive, especially as European markets were unresponsive to yesterday's advance. Another bearish factor was gossip current that the wheat crop in north Argentine is not the complete failure that has been widely assumed to be the case, and that the crop in south Argentine is turning out very well.

A THOUGHT.

A SIMPLE SYSTEM THAT ALWAYS WORKS WELL

To be worthy of the confidence of your cooperators and to deserve the faith of your friends—to forgive the faults of your neighbors as frequently as they are compelled to overlook your own shortcomings—always to remember that a cloudy conscience cannot enjoy a ray of sunshine—to let the sense of humor save you from taking things and yourself too seriously, is a simple system that always works well.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Peterborough, January 7, 1926.

The Editor,
Peterborough Examiner,
City.

Dear Mr. Editor: May I be privileged to say through the medium of the columns of your journal that I was indeed surprised to see the prominence given by you in Tuesday's issue to the report concerning that most unfortunate case in which Sir Basil Thompson is involved. I think you will agree that this is hardly in accordance with the ethics and higher ideals of journalism which were recently expounded in one of your editorials towards the close of the old year. Whatever may be said it certainly cannot be suggested that any benefit, morally or literary, can be derived by the use of such bold type.

Sir Basil Thompson, as doubtless you are aware, was indeed "a man of the hour" during the days of the war. His clever schemes by which he frustrated the machinations of many foreign spies and agents won for him almost world wide admiration and, so it was rumored, animosity and jealousy on the part of some of the chiefs of Scotland Yard. This rumour may be piffle but usually where there is smoke, there is fire. Suffice it is to say he resigned and later published his memoirs.

The diligence of the police in effecting his arrest is not at all dissimilar to that shown in the case of Sir Almeric Fitzroy, late clerk to the Privy Council, and looks very suspicious in view of the rumours current subsequent to the publication of Sir Basils memoirs, to the effect that he would have to step very guardedly in future.

The plea he entered in court may have been right or wrong and as mortals we possess no power by which we can determine in a case of this kind who is telling the truth. Therefore, let us view it from a broad minded basis and constrain ourselves lest in our haste we condemn an innocent man.

Above all, Mr. Editor, can we not eliminate this "spicy" news or if it must be published, is the use of such bold type absolutely necessary? I am no prude but I have a most wholesome respect for British fair play.

Yours very truly,
D. G. MELTON

HUNGARY BARES ROYALIST PLOT FULLY PLANNED

100,000 Men Available in Alleged Coup to Restore Monarchy.

FASCISTS ACTIVE

Hungary Shocked by Great Counterfeiting Scandal—Three Arrests.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Jan. 8—(Canadian Press).—Proof that a coup d'etat in favor of Archduke Albrech had been planned is declared to have been discovered by those investi[illegible] an alleged plot to restore the monarchy. Details of the Royalist movement, as learned through the investigators, revealed that one hundred thousand men were available, made up of 37,000 regulars of the national army, controlled by the regent, Admiral Horthy, 25,000 police, gendarmes and customs officers and nearly 40,000 members of the Fascist organization.

Admiral Horthy is said to have been ready to step down from the regency to make way for Albrecht.

Previous reports had it that the leader of the Fascisti, Julius Gombos, had assembled many adherents a short distance from Budapest, with the intention of marching on the capital, and that extraordinary precautions were being taken by the Government to protect the city not only from disorders within, but from any attack from without.

Counterfeit Scandal.

The great thirty billion franc counterfeiting scandal, through the disclosure of which the present serious situation in Hungary has arisen, remains in a rather quiescent state. The arrest of three minor officials of the Government map printing bureau was the only active development. A story is told concerning the granting of a diplomatic passport to Colonel Jancowitch for Holland, which was done under direct instructions from the prefect of police Nadossy, who ordered the lone functionary then in the office to prepare the document for Jancowvitch and place diplomatic seals on his trunk.

"What does the trunk contain" the functionary asked Nadossy, in order to register it in the record books.

"Counterfeit notes," Nadossy replied in a joking manner. That is what the trunk really did contain.

AUTOMOBILE STRUCK AND BROKE CUTTER

Driver Didn't Stop to See if Anyone Had Been Hurt.

DOURO, Jan. 8.—One evening recently as Mr. and Mrs. Stan Farley and Miss Kathleen Cavanagh were on their way home from Peterboro on the Norwood road, an automobile travelling at a high rate of speed struck the cutter throwing the occupants out and breaking the shafts. Fortunately no one was hurt. The driver of the auto failed to stop to see whether any harm had been done.

REGINA TRADE FIGHT.

Direct Selling in Saskatchewan the Issue.

REGINA, Sask., Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press.) — Yesterday saw a fight start between trade factions in Saskatchewan—those who sell direct to customers, taking orders at homes for goods to be delivered at a future date, and established merchants. The direct sellers and that body includes several big corporations, claim they are unduly taxed and discriminated against under the provisions of the Hawkers' and Peddlers' Act. That measure was before the Legislative committee on municipal law yesterday and repfesentatives of various organizations were herad.

FOUR GUARDS AT BURWASH FARM ARE DISMISSED

Three Others on Probation—Traffic in Drugs Alleged.

GENERAL CLEAN-UP

No Appeal to be Considered—Department Approved Action.

BURWASH, Jan. 8.—Drastic action has been taken by Rev. J. K. Fairfull, superintendent of the Burwash industrial farm, to put a stop to certain grave abuses which, it is alleged, were practised by a number of guards. As a result of the clean-up four guards were discharged a few days before Christmas, three more are on probation at the present time, and, according to the superintendent, others may be discharged in the near future. The four men dismissed were variously charged with manufacturing moonshine, trafficking in drugs and smuggling letters to the prisoners.

Since Rev. J. K. Fairfull was appointed superintendent of the Farm at the beginning of the year there have been many dismissals and changes in the staff. Matters reached a climax some two months ago, however, when a prisoner escaped and reached the railway line seven miles distant from the institution. He was recaptured and pleaded in excuse for his escapade that he had been under the influence of liquor at the time. Investigation, according to the superintendent, revealed the fact that liquor had been obtained from one of the guards. In view of this discovery an investigation was begun among the wardens and two officials from the department in Toronto—Inspector Boyd and Mr. Norris—spent two days studying conditions. The discharges followed their investigation.

Department Approved.

Two of the men dismissed are said to have gone to Toronto to demand a complete investigation. But Mr. Fairfull declares emphatically that their cases will not be reopened.

"You can take it from me," he said, "that there will be no further investigation. I would not take the four discharged men back under any consideration. I acted with the full knowledge and approval of the Department, and as far as I am concerned the case is closed. I am prepared to say, however, that the situation is not yet cleaned up and there probably will be other discharges in the near future."

"Since I have been here a number of guards have been dismissed," Mr. Fairfull went on, "some of them for offences more grave than these we have just investigated. I don't know how many men have been fired—a good number. They were all unsuitable for the job and I took the same attitude which would be taken by the executive of a business—I discharged them. In no case have I been autocratic for I have consulted with the officials of the Department, and without exception my action was approved.

No Other Course.

"When the present situation arose I asked for two officers of the Department to help conduct the probe. They were familiar with all the facts and they both agreed that the only course open to me was to dismiss the offenders. There was no discrimination, each case was reviewed on its merits and I had no alternative but to discharge the four men. We know that others are guilty, too, but we hope to mete out the same treatment to them."

From a man with full knowledge of the workings of the institution the writer learned of the drug trafficking which is alleged to have taken place. "Recently," said the informant, "the body of a notorious drug peddler was found in Toronto. In one of his pockets a wrapper was found addressed to a guard at Burwash. It was afterwards found that the drug peddler had been sending supplies to the guard for sale among the addicts at the farm."

Coroner Finds Evidence of Sister's Fffort to Save Brothers.

REMAINS OF FOUR

LISTOWELL, Ont., Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press).—The remains of the four Sharp children who lost their lives in the Elma Township fire Wednesday morning were found in the afternoon and removed to McLaughlin Undertaking Establishment, Listowell.

Dr. Jas. Moore, Coroner, after viewing them, was convinced that the four bodies were there, and also that an inquest was unnecessary. He was in consultation with Mr. Geo. McPherson of Stratford, County Crown Attorney, who agreed with his decision.

From the position in which the bodies were found it seems certain that the brave Emily had taken the little brothers, Arthur, James and Neil, to the balcony door when she found the stairway cut off by the flames and smoke, but was unable to get it open.

DOLLAR CORN.

Harvester Company Offers That Price.

CHICAGO, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—Dollar corn yesterday became a reality for buyers of farm implements.

Confident that corn will reach one dollar or more a bushel within the next six months, the International Harvester Company authorized its dealers to accept any merchantable corn in payment for farm implements on the basis of one dollar a bushel for No. 2 corn at Chicago.

The company said it acted to restore confidence throughout the corn belt and added that if corn goes above one dollar before the farmer is called on to deliver next May, June or July, he can sell it elsewhere and pay for his implements in the regular way.

EFFICIENCY OF BRITAIN'S NAVY WILL BE TESTED

Charges of Vice-Admiral Lambert Will Likely be Investigated.

DENIAL BY BACON

Criticism to be Mentioned When the House Meets Again.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—Is the British navy efficient and does it maintain its traditional technical superiority? This is the question that is being asked with much animation and some anxiety following the startling declaration by Vice-Admiral Lambert that the public should nsist upon an inquiry being made into the present efficiency of the fleet. The admiralty refuses to be moved by the discussion, saying that it is merely one of Lord Beaverbrook's stunts. It is most unlikely that Admiral Beatty will issue a statement on the matter, but there is some anxiety among individual admirals and members of parliament which may force the admiralty to take the action suggested which at present it openly scorns.

Given the Lie.

Admiral Bacon yesterday replied to Admiral Lambert's charges by asserting that his statements that the British fleet at the battle of Jutland found itself inferior in ships, guns, engines, torpedoes and technical device to the German fleet, "are utterly untrue"

Admiral Bacon states that the British ships were superior to the enemy and the reason German vessels escaped was because there were only three hours of daylight for the purpose of pursuing. He admits that the German men-of-war were better armored than the British, but this was because the British navy had been built for world service, whereas the Germans had concentrated on the North sea.

Trust Admiralty.

The consensus of opinion is that the admiralty can be trusted to maintain the efficiency of the fleet and Admiral Bacon makes a plea for the public to show this trust. Yet since Admiral Lambert has called for an inquiry, the matter cannot be left where it is and it is learned that several members will call attention to the affair when the house of commons meets next month.

Brakes For Airships Will Aid In Landings

ROME, Jan. 8 (United Press) Airplanes will be able to land as easily as birds, if a new Italian device, tried out today before Under-Secretary Bonzani proves successful. The invention is based upon special brakes and it is claimed that it will permit aircraft to alight on ships.

Today's experiments were reported to have augured well for the future of the invention.

MAY INVESTIGATE ALUMINUM COMPANY

Depends on Evidence Before U. S. Committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—Officials of both the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission will be called to-day as witnesses in the Senate investigation of the failure to bring contempt proceedings against the Aluminum Company of America.

This was decided yesterday by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which deferred until to-day the beginning of an inquiry sponsored by Senator Walsh, Democrat, Montana, and involving a company in which Secretary Mellon is a large stockholder.

Chairman Cummins was directed to request the attendance of Attorney-General Sargent and his assistant, William J. Donovan, and Chairman Vernon W. Van Fleet, Secretary Otis B. Johnson and Chief Examiner Millard F. Hudson of the Trade Commission.

The full scope of the investigation may depend largely upon the testimony of these witnesses. Aside from the failure of the Justice Department to bring contempt proceedings for charged violations of a court decree, the inquiry will be directed to the question of the extent to which the Department has been handicapped by the refusal of the trade commission to make available to its testimony taken from the files of the Aluminum Company.

The above photograph shows three European princesses who are given the palm as being the most beautiful princesses of the old world. Presence Of Some Striking Seamen Causes Uproar When Their Wives Meet To Protest Against Walkout

LONDON, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—London had a novel strike development yesterday, when some hundreds of wives of seamen met at Canningtown, East London, to protest against the recent unofficial strike of British seamen and to register indignation over the loss of money for family upkeep through the husbands quitting work.

The meeting soon fell into an uproar, due in part to the presence of some of the husbands.

A Miss Bowerman, who made the opening speech, said the husbands were a lot of dismal "Jammies."

The seamen started singing, "Tell Me the Old, Old Story." This excited the anger of the women, one of whom marched dramatically among the singers and pushed one, presumbaly her husband, out of the hall.

Mrs. Drummond, another speaker, in making an unfavorable allusion to the men, brought forth another uproar, this time among the women themselves. After this order, entirely disappeared.

It was a long time before enough silence was obtained to carry a resolution denouncing the promoters of the strike.

FRANCOIS REPEATS BLINDFOLD DRIVE

Made Tour of City Streets in Automobile To-day.

Francois repeated his sensational blindfolded drive around the city this morning, commencing at the Capitol Theatre and making a forty-minute tour of some of the principal streets in a Chevrolet coach. Securely blindfolded with heavy bandages of absorbent cotton, covered by several thicknesses of black cloth, the bandages adjusted and taped securely by Inspector Reid and J. L. Clifford, superintendent of the Street Railway Company, he was accompanied by three passengers, Mr. Clifford, Mr. A. G. Crowe, manager of the Capitol Theatre, and Miss McCarthy, of The Examiner staff.

Francois was just a little better this morning in his mental telepathic work, if that were possible, than on his first demonstration here some months ago. He carried on a conversation with people on the streets, pausing at one corner to request "the gentleman in the fur coat" to transfer a package from right to left hand, so that he might shake hands with him. He named correctly the numbers on passing street cars, and the names of passing automobiles, said "good morning" cheerfully to several passers-by who "were on their way home to dinner," asked a couple of adventuresome young men who stepped out in the path of his car to stand still and promised he would not run over them, turned out on several occasions to avoid striking passing teams, mentioned the color of a team of horses and the type of the sled they were attached to, and made his way unhesitatingly to a house at the north end of Water Street, which he had visited on only one occasion previous to this morning.

The performance is carried on solely by mental telepathy. The passengers in the car do not speak to or touch the blindfolded driver. They simply concentrate on the traffic ahead of them and he immediately mentions anything that they may see, on the instant that it is perceived by them. He does not manipulate the bandages in any way and drives much more skilfully and swiftly, where the traffic permits, than many a driver using both eyes.

Francois will repeat his drive tomorrow, starting from the Capitol Theatre at 12 o'clock.

WOULD ASCERTAIN DOMINION ATTITUDE

Baldwin Government May Hold Imperial Conference on Locarno Pact.

LONDON, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—The Daily Express features a long story to the effect that the Baldwin Government contemplates the holding of another imperial conference at the earliest possible date. The chief object of the suggested conference, The Express says, is to discuss the attitude of the various dominions on the Locarno security pact.

LOCARNO PACT MAY BE BASIS OF PARLEY

Austen Chamberlain Suggested Conference Between Britain and Dominions.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8. — (Canadian Press).—A conference between the British and Dominion Governments to consider the Locarno Pact among other matters was suggested by Austen Chamberlain, the Foreign Secretary, in the British House of Commons on November 18th. The matter received some tentative discussion, but there has not been, it is understood, any formal proposal of a conference. It is not thought likely here that there will be another Imperial conference before next year.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE AT LIBERAL CAUCUS

Members Pass Resolution of Trust in Rt. Hon. Mr. King.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press)—A resolution of confidence in the leader of the Liberal party, Rt. Hon. Mackenie King, was passed in a caucus of the Liberal members of the House of Commons and Senators this morning. The resolution was moved by A. Stork, member for Skeena, and seconded by F. Rinfret, member for St. James. Hon. Charles Marcile was elected president of the Government caucus.

The caucus adopted a resolution reading in part: "The Liberal members of the Senate and House of Commons at this, their first meeting since the recent general elections, desire to avail themselves of the earliest opportunity to express to the Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. MacKenzie King, their unqualified appreciation of his able leadership of the party in the last parliament and throughout the recent campaign. They look forward to his early return to the leadership in the House of Commons. They desire to express their entire approval of the constitutional course which, as Prime Minister he has pursued, in view of the results of the general elections."

WILL CHALLENGE AT FIRST CHANCE

Meighen Will Move Vote of Non-Confidence on Address.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8 (Canadian Press).—"The Government will be challenged at the first opportunity," was the official and emphatic announcement made at the conclusion of the first Conservative caucus of the session held this morning. Today's meeting was enthusiastically described by Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, the Conservative leader, as "Splendid."

Whole-hearted approval of the amendment to be moved in the House to the Speech from the Throne, calling for a vote of non-confidence in the Government ,was given. "The loyal and undivided support of every Conservative member was pledged," it was stated, to the Conservative chief, whose leadership was lauded by all the speakers. It was decided that during the present crisis the programme and tactics of the Conservative party would be left largely in the hands of Mr. Meighen. Donald Sutherland, Oxford South, was re-elected chairman of the caucus.

Y.M.C.A. TO OPERATE OLD CHURCH LEAGUE

Three Groups, With About Eighteen Teams in Prospect.

At an enthusiastic meeting of the Boys 'Work Board held in the Y.M. C.A. the other evening it was unanimously decided to take over and operate the old Church Hockey League. The executive of the Church Hockey League gave valuable service to sport in the city last year, and was composed of E. Maybee, Douglas Loomis and Howard Hall.

There were present at the meeting several delegations from different churches and the whole hockey situation was dealt with. It appears that there is big promise of an even bigger league than last year, with four in the Midget group, seven or eight in the Juvenile and five in the Junior series. The rules and regulations will remain much the same as in previous years. A five deposit will be demanded from each entry to be returned at the season's close providing each team defaults in not more than two games.

The age limit for the respective groups are: Under 15 for Midget; under 17 for Juvenile, and under 19 for the Junior. The schedule will soon be drawn up and the games will likely get under way next week.

The whole idea of the Church hockey league is to bring into the game all the boys who otherwise would be missing an opportunity to play in organized games.

IN POLICE COURT.

The case of Stewart vs. Akey was heard in the Police Court yesterday morning and afternoon, when James Akey was charged with selling liquor on the 22nd of December, without having obtained a license to do so. The accused, through his counsel, Mr. J. A. O'Brien, of the firm of Gordon and O'Brien, pleaded not guilty. Mr. J. F. Strickland acted for the prosecution.

Mr. O'Brien asked for an adjournment of the case, owing to the defence not having received particulars of the time, amount and place connected with the charge. The Magistrate directed that the case proceed and at its conclusion, reserved decision for one week, allowing Akey $500 bail on his own recognizance. The counsel for the prosecution, Mr. Strickland, on being queried as to his wishes in the matter of bail, remarked jocularly, "It is my experience with Akey in these cases that he always turns up.

The two chief witnesses for the prosecution were Special Officer William Devonald, and Special Officer William T. Starkey, both of Toronto, who objected very vigorously to the term "Spotters" as applied to them by the counsel for the defence, and told of having purchased a bottle from Mr. Akey about ten o'clock on the evening of December 22nd at his place of business on Aylmer street. A ten-dollar bill, with six dollars in change, changed hands during this transaction, and the men then returned to their hotel and sealed the bottle, which was produced in court and referred to as "Exhibit A.

Mr. Devonald, when queried as to a previous visit on or about the 4th of December, when the two had visited Mr. Akey's premises, denied having seen the proprietor at that time, but described rather minutely a gentleman whom he had seen whose description tallied in the main with the appearance of Mr. Akey. Mr. Starkey asserted that he had seen Mr. Akey on that occasion.

A certain amount of information by the defence regarding the visit of the two officers to a picture show during the course of their visits to the city elicited a query from Mr. Strickland as to whether they had attended the entertainment in company with Mr. Akey, but both vigorously denied this implication, and Mr. Akey later, in the box, asserted that "a picture show is a place I never go to.

Inspector Arthur Moss, Provincial Inspector of the Ontario Provincial police at present employed in the enforcement of the Ontario Temperance Act, was another witness for the prosecution, his evidence having chiefly to do with the bottle, "Exhibit A, and a certificate of analysis of same produced by him.

In rebuttal of the evidence of the two officers, Mr. O'Brien produced several witnesses on Mr. Akey's behalf, including Mr. Akey himself, Edward and Ernest Jones, the former a co-user with the accused of the premises at the corner of Brock and Aylmer streets, and the latter his son, also Vernon Freedley, a mechanic employed by Fontain's Garage on Hunter street, who had made certain repairs to Akey's car on the night in question, and William Eastland, who was placed in the box and sworn, then withdrawn without being interrogated by either counsel. All swore to the effect that Mr. Akey on the night of the 22nd of December, tired out with the exertion of having drawn in wood during the day from his farm, had gone home shortly after nine o'clock, driven there by the younger Jones, and had not returned to his place of business that night. Mr. Akey vigorously denied having ever seen the two special officers and also denied having ever had liquor for sale on his premises and having sold either of them a drop of it.

Mr. Akey also disclaimed any accusation of having liquor of any sort on his premises, He was not willing to admit that the horses which are domiciled in one portion of his establishment, in charge of the elder Jones, were in the habit of requiring spiritual stimulant at any time, and cleared them of this charge at once. A dash of ether or belladonna was all that was required when the animals needed stimulation, he said.

Mr. Akey was of the opinion that the man described by the officers might have been his double and said that he could produce several men who looked like him. He disclaimed the suggestion made by Mr. Strickland that it might be the brother of whom he has spoken on several occasions of this sort at previous times, his brother not being in the city on that date, he said.

Devonald, recalled to the box by Mr. Strickland, characterized the evidence of Akey and his companions as "a parcel of lies," and Starkey, also in the box again, said that he remembered Eastland on the occasion of the visit.

Dundee Council Decides To Enter Dry City List

DUNDEE, Scotland, Jan. 8.—(Canadian Press).—The Town Council of Dundee has followed the example of Glasgow and Aberdeen in the matter of banning the use of intoxicants at civic functions, and henceforth this city will be dry, so far as the municipal government is concerned.

Mr. O'Brien, summing up, was of the opinion that the evidence, outside that given by Inspector Moss, was simply evidence of two "spotters," whose testimony was not entitled to credence, especially when contradicted by the evidence of reputable witnesses. Akey, he said, had often been accused of bootlegging and his premises had been searched, but he had never yet been found guilty of the charge. It was simply a case of giving a dog a bad name and the "spotters" had been sent down here to get someone and had picked on Akey as a good opportunity. He did not attach much importance to their identification of Akey as the man who had sold thm the liquor, as they would naturally be able to recognize the lawyers in the case when seen in court and would then pick out the only available man left, who happened to be the accused. Mr. O'Brien also impugned the reliability of "Exhibit A," and said that the evidence of the two special officers had shown that they had had this bottle in their sole possession from December 22nd to December 28th, and might have had countless opportunities to fill it with any liquor they cared to choose. The contents of the bottle had only tested to 29.65, a low percentage, in the counsel's opinion.

Mr. Strickland was of the opinion that it was a question for the magistrate to decide whether the evidence of the two special officers, who, he asserted, had no animus in the matter and no special ends to serve by securing convictions of this sort, beyond the carrying out of their duties, for which they were paid a regular salary, without extra commissions of any sort, should be believed, or the evidence of Mr. Akey and his companions.

IMMIGRATION BOOM COMING THIS YEAR

Honorable G. N. Gordon, K.C., Says Railways Interested in Development.

The Honorable G. N. Gordon returned this morning from Ottawa and Montreal, where he has been several days on business.

He said that the Land and Colonization settlement branches of the Canadian National Railways, and the Canadian Pacific Railway were very active in developing further organization for bringing settlers and colonists to the West early next spring. According to the information Mr. Gordon stated he had received from different quarters, it looked like a boom in immigration and settlement in the West this year, greater than any year since the war.

BRIDGE TO GET NEW LIGHTING

Fault Found With Installation During the Construction.

DRILLING HOLES.

Under the supervision of Ross Dobbin, a number of men are delving into the hidden mysteries of Hunter street bridge and dragging forth rusted bits of galvanized piping and wire cable which it is said testify to the hasty methods of construction which had been employed in the construction of the bridge.

Mr. Dobbin said that many of the important details were faulty, that the wires should not have been laid in the cement without the protection of conduits and that the lighting system was quite ineffective. In order to have lights on the two middle standards it was necessary to stretch a wire cable above the roadway connecting the lamps.

In order to make a permanent repair the men are now engaged in drilling a fissure into the solid concrete. A lead cased cable will be used instead of the bare wire which is now being removed. Mr. Dobbin also has planned auxiliary standards to be placed between those which are incorporated in the bridge structure. He said that the lights used would be similar to that on the flat iron dominating Riverside rink. The work will not be completed this winter.

SYNOPSIS

Saltonstall Cabot Adams finds himself in the early morning on Long Island. An officer of the New York State Police is approaching him on a motorcycle. Adams had left a Connecticut town just after midnight to search for Connemara Moore, who had suddenly disappeared a few hours before. Connemara was to have announced her engagement to him—or to Bing Carrington—but didn't. Adams had barely reached Long Island when he was "held up."

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.

Salt caught his breath. Then he grinned abruptly and in spite of himself. In the movies and in books, the thought flashed through his brain, the man who came along to save the day was always a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted. Well, here was the day being saved, and by the nearest thing to the Mounties that the forty-eight states have yet produced.

The trooper saw Salt as he came abreast of him and brought his machine to a slithering stop with an ominous grating of two outspread boots against the pavement. The newcomer stared a moment, in the manner of onewho had momentarily forgotten his breeding, wriggling his motorcycle backward the while in that disconcerting fashion of a cop who desires converse and information.

Presently the trooper spoke. "What's the big idea?" he asked. His tone gave Salt a sinking and definite impression that what the gentleman wanted to know was precisely what he had outlined, to wit: the nature of the big idea.

Now Saltonstall Cabot Adams, for one is a Saltonstall and a Cabot and an Adams however one's appearance may point to the contrary, had been ready to make something of a speech; not an address, exactly, but at least a dignified and rounded summary of his identity, as it affected him, the situation as it affected the others who had been in his party—in short, the night's story. But looking into the trooper's cold blue eye he found himself stammering inconsequentially:

"I—I've been to a masquerade."

"Oh, is that so?" queried the other with a slight lifting of his eyebrows. "Where was this here, now, masquerade—on the mud flats?"

"Er—er—I tell you!"

"And do they have 'em in the morning now?" The trooper's voice changed. "Step out here, you," it commanded briskly, "and let's look you over."

Salt stepped.

"What do you think you're dressed as?" the trooper barked.

"Why—why, as an Elizabethan gentleman."

"Lizzie who? Say, son, you look more like the devil. My God, to think I'd ever see a grown man in bright red tights!" The trooper began to smile. "I guess you don't look like you'll harm anybody—much. Roll home, buddy, and sleep it off. Rotten stuff you get nowadays, ain't it? Where do you live, anyway?"

Salt gulped. "Stamford, Connecticut," he said.

"Stamford—what? Way across the Sound?" The trooper started to laugh, but abruptly his eyes narrowed. "What's that you've got in your hand?" he demanded.

The young man held out the coil of auburn hair. His own face reddened as he did so.

"Say, what are you, anyway?" the trooper wanted to know. "Where did you get that? What's the big idea? There was a guy loose around here last year that stole women's hair. Say, now!" He leaped from his machine and with three swift double taps satisfied himself that Salt had no weapon concealed upon his person.

And then Saltonstall Cabot Adams began to plead. "She gave it to me," he kept repeating. "I tell you she gave it to me. And we lost her and followed her in a boat, and there was a fight and I had to push her off in the mud——"

"You mean you pushed the young lady off in the mud?"

"No, the boat, I tell you. I pushed the boat off."

"And then somebody bigger'n you pushed you off. Is that it?"

"Yes," Salt lied desperately, "that's it. We were all drunk, I guess. I just woke up a little while ago, back there in the woods." The young man's face was reddening even more deeply. In spite of his concern a voice of conscience shouted within him that he was speaking an untruth, and a louder voice of pride made him squirm internally because he, whose initials were S.C.A., was actually pleading with a menial. Still, anything was better than going to jail.

The policeman was studying him intently.

Tentatively Salt asked, "Which way is the Greenwich ferry? I'll walk there. I can get across somehow."

"H'm!" mused the trooper. "No, I guess you're not worth takin' up. You're what I thought you were—just a harmless boob. The ferry's that way." He jerked his thumb over his shoulder. "And I'll bet you have a string of kids seven miles long behind you before you get there. Move your dogs, buddy, before I change my mind."

Salt moved. When he reached Bayville, hungry and tired and thirsty, but unconscious of it all because of the utter humiliation and wretchedness attendant upon the laughter and taunts and gibes that had followed his every step, he made for the farthest corner of the ferry pier. The sky was blue and the sun was bright and warm, the water danced with the care-free sparkle of a mellow summer's day. But Saltonstall Cabot Adams saw nothing of this. Aside from a hiding place and complete extinction, there was one thing and one only that he desired. He wanted a cigarette. He had none, and he could not bring himself to try to beg. Yes, he wanted a smoke. He would have given fifty dollars on the spot for that.

He had no idea where anybody was, and at the present moment he did not much care. He did not even know that his nine-mile pilgrimage had taken him past the very entrance gates of the house where Connemara and the rest of them had fallen together. But even that would have interested him little. In spite of his need for help, Salt had been in no mood to drop in at anybody's house. What he wanted now was to get home—and to his own proper clothes.

He did not even know that at that very moment he was missing a perfectly good ride in a perfectly good automobile.
